SIX ELECTRIC LIGHT MASTS TO BE ERECTED.

This splendid tract of land, taking in Eleventh and Twelfth streets, and extending from Main to San Pedro streets, in the very heart of the FINEST IMPROVEMENTS IN LOS ANGELES!

is now offered to the public by the owner, Mr. Childs, on terms that must command its immediate sale and improvement. Nearly every lot is Covered With Orange and Lemon Trees,

ENGLISH WALNUTS, and vines of choicest varieties, all of over twenty years' growth. A lot on this tract can find a cottage to form at once a beautiful home with charming grounds and improvements ready for occupancy. You are invited to view on Twelfth street, the residences of several citizens already erected thereon. Many of these lots on Main street have been held by Mr. Childs at $1,500 to $2,500 each. Lots in the tract. on Los Angeles street have been held at $1,000 to $1,900 each. There is not a lot on the tract that is not Worth the Subscription Price of SIX HUNDRED DOLLARS.

THE TITLE IS PERFECT.

Roads are being opened and six masts with electric lights will be erected immediately. The division of the lots will take place in six months, at which time the purchasers meet together and choose a committee of three disinterested citizens and a recording secretary, the names of the purchasers being placed promiscuously in a hat. As each name is withdrawn by one of the committee the purchaser, or his or her representative, in order, makes a choice of one lot on the large map exhibited, and that choice, being recorded by the secretary of the meeting, is unchangeable, and will receive a deed for the same direct from Mr. Childs. This is on the plan of the best homestead associations of other cities.

THE EXTREMELY LOW PRICE

at which these central lots have been placed justifies the belief that even the least valuable one in the whole tract will be

Worth $1,000 Within the Time for Full Payment,

While others will more than quadruple the present very low rate. Lithographic maps of the 200 lots, roads, location of electric light masts, etc., are now ready at agency. As this enterprise is not a money-making one, but believed to be a great public good, aiding in the wonderful progress of our city, no books of subscription will not be placed in a real estate agency, but will be opened on

THE MORNING'S NEWS.

Six more bodies were found yesterday in the ruins of the Brooklyn Orphans' Home.

The Dupont statue was unveiled in Washington yesterday. Senator Bayard delivered the address.

The New England Tobacco-growers' Association yesterday adopted a memorial to Congress in relation to the Spanish treaty.

The Golden Flouring Mills at Petaluma were destroyed by fire yesterday. It is supposed to be the work of an incendiary.

A mob of armed men yesterday took possession of a Dakota town and sacked the court-house. They also plundered the mail-bags.

Orders were received at the Mare Island navy yard yesterday from Washington to proceed with work on the Mohican and fit her for sea at once.

Senator Dolph, of Oregon, has introduced several bills in the Senate affecting timber lands in California, Oregon and Washington Territory.

The storm continues all over the State, and the rainfall at most places seems to be in excess of last year's. Several rivers are reported rising rapidly.

Congress seems unable to agree on the Naval Appropriation bill, and in consequence the usual holiday recess has to be taken by installments.

Secretary Frelinghuysen has submitted to the House a comparison of the wages paid in England and in the United States; also a comparison of the cost of necessaries of life.

During the debate on the interstate commerce bill yesterday Mr. Reed, of Maine, sarcastically criticised a previous ruling of Chairman Springer as lacking good sense and courtesy.

JUPITER PLUVIUS lingereth near.

JOHN is on the increase in San Francisco.

A CANNON went off in the House yesterday.

NEW YEAR'S DAY will see the face of the land, everywhere in Southern California, tinged with green.

THE literary agriculturists of Santa Ana are growing a potato which they call "The Light of Asia."

FRANCIS D. MOULTON, "the mutual friend," is dead, but the Beecher-Tilton scandal is more tenacious of life.

BEECHER will raid the South on a lecturing tour. Is it possible that it was for this expedition that he was getting ready during all the late Presidential campaign?

A KENTUCKY paper wants Samuel J. Randolph for President in 1888. Who in the Old Scratch and Tom Walker is Randolph, anyway? Is he from Bourbon county?

"HON. E. F. SPENCE, Surveyor-elect of Los Angeles county," is the way the San Francisco Call put it the other day. This is incorrect. Mr. Spence's correct official title is Alcalde-General and Jigadier-Brindle commanding.

GENERAL GRANT is represented to be next to penniless through the investment of the $250,000 raised for him in Wabash stock and bonds, which are now practically worthless; yet he discourages the proposition to pension him.

THERE may be a flavor of sour grapes in this from the New Orleans Picayune: "The old Liberty bell is a cracked thing, any way, as a bell, and wouldn't be worth shucks for a sugar-house. If it belongs to the people of Philadelphia they can keep it. It can do nothing for the New Orleans ring."

COPPER is down to thirteen cents, said to be the lowest price ever known. The cause is attributed to the discovery of extensive deposits of this metal in Montana and Arizona in recent years. Copper is now used for the construction of telegraph wires, and possesses remarkable tensile strength.

MR. WETMORE advises all grape-growers to become wine-makers, though he does not figure out any very attractive profits from the business on the general average. If the whole agricultural community were gone daft on the wine business, wouldn't the profits of production be still smaller?

THE Philadelphia Times rises up to remark that "Senator Bayard would have been the Democratic candidate for President in 1880 but for a single foolish utterance a quarter of a century ago." The "foolish utterance" referred to was an expression of sympathy with the rebellion. The Democratic party was not unwilling to make Hayard President, but was afraid to risk his nomination.

"THE Mastodon Liar of the Ago" is understood to be the correct official designation of one J. J. Barker, a clerk in the Treasury Department at Washington, who recently made serious charges against Controller Lawrence, a man of proved probity and honor, and of acknowledged honesty as an official. Barker's title of "The Mastodon Liar" was first given him by his neighbors, who know him best. The Democratic papers all take stock in Barker. They love liars.

THE Santa Ana Herald excoriates the practice of collecting taxes from the people in one instalment instead of two, and locking the money up in the Farmers' and Merchants' Bank, thus withdrawing it from circulation, cramping hundreds of tax-payers, "and putting an effective clog upon business of all kinds for an indefinite period." It pronounces the present method a disgrace, and advocates the making of taxes payable in at least two instalments, "say in June and December." These views have much to commend them.

GENERAL GRANT, in addition to the papers on famous battles of the civil war which he is preparing for the Century Magazine, is said to be engaged on a regular history of the Rebellion. He is taking great pains to make his work accurate, even going to the length of sending men to make measurements of the battle-fields which he describes, and carrying on an extensive correspondence with officers who took part in these conflicts, in order to see whether their memory of facts corresponds with his own.

The San Francisco Chronicle, from which the above item is taken, remarks: "If Grant can write history as he wrote army bulletins, he will achieve a great success." A history of the war of the Rebellion by the most conspicuous figure in it will be a great addition to the records of the most momentous period in the career of the Republic.

THE Bell Telephone experts are at work on plans which, if successful, will result in the connection of every large city in the country by telephone. Professor Bell is certain that the telephone can be used for communication equally as well as the telegraph. The first cities to be united are New York and Philadelphia, and the work has already commenced. A patent, double "long-drawn" copper wire is to be stretched between the cities, thus making a complete current without induction or ground wiring. When this line works smoothly New York and Boston are to be joined, and then the line will be pushed west, with Chicago as the objective point. The same system of relays and repeaters used in telegraph is also to be applied to the telephonic messages.

WASHINGTON.

Proceedings in the Senate and House Yesterday.

NO AGREEMENT ON THE NAVAL BILL.

Mr. Reed, of Maine, Pays His Respects to Mr. Springer—The House Virtually Adjourns Over the Holidays.

Associated Press Dispatches to The Times.

SENATE.

WASHINGTON, Saturday Dec. 20.

Mr. Vest called up his resolution objecting to sending the proposed surveying expedition to Nicaragua. It having been moved the matter be considered in secret legislative session, the motion was seconded by Mr. Cameron of Wisconsin, and doors ordered closed.

During the secret session the doors for a few minutes were considered open for the purpose of receiving a request from the House for further conference on the naval bill, which request was granted. When secret legislative session closed, the Senate went into executive session.

When the doors were opened, Mr. Hoar moved to take up for consideration House resolution providing for adjournment from to-day till January 5th. The resolution was taken up, and Mr. Hoar asked Allison, chairman of the Appropriation Committee, as to the condition of things in case the Senate should agree to the resolution in question.

Mr. Allison said if the Senate passed this resolution, and the two houses should adjourn to the date named, there would on the 1st of January be no money from which the navy could be paid. Every Senator could therefore judge for himself whether it was the duty of the Senate to adjourn.

At 3 o'clock a message was received from the House making provision for the naval service for thirty-one days from the 31st of December next.

Mr. Butler called for its immediate consideration.

The bill was read and after debate Mr. Butler withdrew his call for consideration of the bill.

Mr. Logan, from the Committee on Military affairs, reported the Military Academy bill, and it passed without debate. It appropriates $309,305 for the support of the academy next for the fiscal year.

The House concurrent resolution, providing for adjournment from to-day till January 5th, was taken up and not agreed to—yeas 6, nays 25, no quorum, whereupon the Senate adjourned till Monday.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The House resumed consideration of the inter-state commerce bill. Mr. Henderson, of Iowa, moved to strike out the section prohibiting railroads from charging greater compensation for transportation of freight a shorter than a longer distance. He believed the section was deadly to the interest of the part of the country he represented. He represented a great agricultural interest.

Mr. Reagan opposed the motion. Not to prohibit a greater rate for a shorter than a longer haul was to submit the railroads the regulation of the entire commerce of the country.

During the progress of the debate Mr. Reagan was asked by Mr. Randall to permit him to report a conference disagreement on the temporary naval appropriation bill.

Mr. Randall explained the differences between the House and Senate, and a long debate ensued.

Mr. Thomas was opposed to the temporary bill. It was a sitpahol attempt on the part of the House to dodge a stern duty.

Mr. Cannon said the strongest argument against the ratification of certain treaties was that the United States stood powerless to enter upon a policy, because it was crippled so far as a navy was concerned.

The House insisted on its disagreement to Senate amendments and a further conference was ordered.

Mr. Randall moved that when the House adjourned to-day it be to next Wednesday, the 24th inst. The Constitution, he said, prohibited adjournment for more than three days without the concurrence of the Senate. He asked unanimous consent that it should be agreed that on the 24th, a further adjournment be had until the 27th, then to the 31st, and then until the 5th of January, and that these days no business be transacted. This would accomplish the judgment of the House on the question of the holiday recess. There was barely a quorum in the House to-day, and it would be impossible to get one next week.

Mr. Randall's motion was agreed to, but unanimous consent was not given to the agreement for further adjournment.

The consideration of the inter-state commerce bill having been resumed, Mr. Reed called the attention of the Speaker to the ruling made yesterday by Mr. Springer, when in Speaker's chair, to the effect that a motion to close debate was not debatable. He thought temporary Speakers should be instructed in that knowledge of parliamentary law, courtesy and good sense which so distinguished the permanent occupant of the chair. [Laughter.]

Mr. Springer replied that when he made the ruling yesterday he believed it to be correct, and believed so still. There was not an opinion of any previous occupant of the chair taking the opposite view. His decision was based on common sense, and on that he stood, though it might not commend him to the gentleman from Maine.

The amendment of Mr. Henderson was rejected—yeas 57, nays 118.

Further consideration of the bill was postponed.

Mr. Randall introduced a bill making temporary provision for the support of the navy for the month of January, 1885.

On the motion of Mr. Hopkins, the Senate joint resolution was passed declaring Christmas and New Years days holidays for all per diem government employes.

The House then adjourned until Wednesday, December 24th.

Though there is no definite agreement that no business shall be transacted on Wednesday, there is tacit understanding to that effect, and it is also understood that consecutive adjournments shall be taken for three business days at a time until January 5th.

New England Tobacco Growers.

HARTFORD, Conn, Dec. 20.—The New England Tobacco Growers' Association had a slim meeting to-day, owing to the cold. A memorial to Congress was adopted, which provides, first, for the abolition of the internal revenue tax on tobacco and cigars and all the machinery of law connected therewith; second, the retention of high rates of duty on all imported wrapper tobacco; third, that treaties of reciprocity with other nations which are schemes of doubtful utility to the business and trade of the country, and which will largely reduce the revenues of the government and greatly injure farmers, manufacturers and laborers engaged in the production of tobacco and its manufactured products, should be rejected by Congress. Coolie and slave labor in Sumatra was deprecated by some speakers as coming in conflict with the cigar-makers of our country, and the proposed Spanish treaty was opposed in the strongest terms.

A Resignation and a Death.

SAN FRANCISCO, Dec. 20.—Lurman Waldhare, Tax Collector-elect of this city, has resigned as Secretary of the State Board of Bank Commissioners. Frank H. Day has been elected his successor. Horace Hawes, Republican candidate for State Assembly from this county, died at his residence last midnight of typhoid fever. He was a son of the late Horace Hawes, one of the most prominent lawyers of the State. Deceased was defeated in the late election by a small majority by the present Assemblyman, J. A. Coleman. He was 25 years of age. He leaves a wife and two children.

He Quietly Stole Away.

SAN FRANCISCO, Dec. 20.—Charles T. Smith on the 26th of September last attempted to commit suicide by shooting himself, owing to fear of arrest, when it was discovered he was a defaulter from the firm of Frank G. Edwards and Co. The amount of the defalcation is believed to be about $20,000. While Smith was sick his attorney stated that as soon as he recovered he would make good the amount of the defalcation or would stand trial for embezzlement and on promises on the part of Smith's friends to the same effect no legal measures were taken to guard him. It is now ascertained that Smith has left the city. It is rumored he has gone to the Sandwich Islands.

Destruction of Petalums Flouring Mills.

PETALUMA, Dec. 20.—The Golden Eagle flouring mills, belonging to W. C. and Samuel Percival, were destroyed by fire to-day. It is believed the fire was the work of an incendiary. The mill was new, having been completed last August. It has been working to its fullest capacity since its completion, and had orders for a year ahead. The loss is stated to be $40,000; insurance, $20,000.

A Fatal Fall.

SAN FRANCISCO, Dec. 20.—Edward B. Wright fell into an open hatchway the depth of fifteen feet at the corner of Buchanan and Sutter streets this evening and was instantly killed. Deceased was 38 years of age and leaves a wife and two children.

CAPITAL CLEANINGS.

The Swain Court-Martial Adjourns Till January 2.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 20.—The cross-examination of General Swain was continued to-day before the Court-Martial, and was directed chiefly to his stock account and "dun bills" transaction. Nothing of particular importance was developed and the examination proceeded in a slow way up to the adjournment. Previous to adjourning it was arranged that counsel for the defense should have two days for argument when the case reaches that stage and counsel for the prosecution one day, that being all they asked to be allowed them. An adjournment was then had to January 2.

BACKBONE RAILROAD FORFEITURE.

The Sub-Committee of the Senate Committee on Public Lands agreed to-day to report at the next meeting of the full committee a substitute for Senator Hill's Backbone railroad forfeiture bill. The substitute forfeits the land on the east side of the river from Baton Rouge to New Orleans and confirms the grant to the New Orleans and Pacific from the point at which they were building at the date of the assignment up to Shreveport upon the line shown by the map filed by the old Backbone Company. A condition is attached that the company shall allow the occupants of unoccupied lands who are entitled to homestead and pre-emption to purchase their lands at $2 per acre.

TEXAS RAIDERS SAID TO BE MEXICANS.

A telegram to the Adjutant General of the army from General Stanley, commanding the Department of Texas, reports that the United States troops who pursued the party of supposed Apache Indians who recently raided Western Texas, from Mexico, returned after pursuing the raiders to the mountains of Mexico, one hundred miles. The American troops secured some horses stolen, and the commanding officer reports his belief that the raiders were not Indians, but Mexicans.

THREE LADIES.

Mr. Dolph introduced in the Senate to-day a bill amending the act of June 30, 1878, relating to the sale of timber lands in California, Oregon and Nevada and the Territory of Washington. The amendment permits lands to be sold without reference to their fitness for cultivation. The original act required that before such lands could be sold they should be certified to be "unfit for cultivation." Another bill introduced by Mr. Dolph provides for amending Section 2347, Revised Statutes, relating to the sale of vacant coal lands belonging to the United States. The original section fixed the price at $20 per acre for such lands of that character as may be within fifteen miles of a completed railroad, and $10 an acre for those outside of that distance. Mr. Dolph's amendment proposes to reduce the price one-half in each case. Both bills were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

UNVEILING THE DUPONT STATUE.

Notwithstanding the very cold weather quite a large number of persons assembled at Dupont Circle this afternoon to witness the ceremonies connected with the unveiling of the statue of Admiral Dupont. The oration was delivered by Senator Bayard, in which he eloquently depicted the services which Dupont had rendered his country.

NOMINATIONS.

The President has nominated Ferdinand W. Shurtliff to be Collector of Customs for the district of Willamette, Oregon, and Jacob S. Boreman, Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of Utah.

WAGE STATISTICS.

A Comparison Between England and the United States.

WASHINGTON, December 20.—Secretary Frelinghuysen has sent voluminous letters to the House of Representatives reviewing reports from Consuls of the United States in relation to the state of labor in Europe. His remarks say British results are principally selected for comparison, as English wages are, generally speaking, the highest in Europe and English trade conditions are more in common with American customs and usage than other countries. He says: "It appears, comparing cities in Europe with those in the United States, that bricklayers and masons in Chicago are paid very nearly three times the wages, plasterers nearly four times, slaters three times, plumbers nearly three times, carpenters twice, blacksmiths twice, bookbinders more than twice, brickmakers nearly three times, brass founders and cabinet makers nearly twice, confectioners twice, cigar makers nearly three times, coopers once and a half as much, engineers, teamsters, and street-railway drivers nearly twice, grocers more than twice, engravers three times, farriers twice, horse-shoers three and one-half times, jewelers more than one and a half, laborers, porter, etc., more than twice, lithographers three times, telegraph operators twice and one-half, saddlers more than twice, printers twice and one-half, saddlers and harness makers more than one and a half times, stevedores more than twice and one-fourth times, tailors twice and three-fourths, and tinners twice and three-fourths the wages paid to similar trades and callings in London." Relative to the prices of necessaries of life, the Secretary says it is frequently asserted the cheapness of living in Europe more than equalizes the lower wages there paid. In the volume on "Labor in Europe," published by the department in 1878, it was shown that prices of food in the United States were actually lower than in Europe and that the working classes in the United States could purchase more and better aliment, dollar for dollar, than the working classes of any country in Europe. A contrary impression is probably due to the fact that the working people of Europe live more cheaply than the working people of the United States, from which it is inferred that the purchasing power of their wages is greater than the purchasing power of similar wages here. It appears from the reports that American workmen consume more and better food than mechanics and laborers abroad and that the cost of this food is as small in the United States as in Europe. It should be borne in mind, in making a comparison, that the better classes of food, nutrition, veal and rice are not used for the most part cheaper in the great cities of the United States than in Europe, but that they are daily necessaries for the table of the better grade of skilled workmen and rarely absent from some one meal of the day and often present at the morning and evening meal.

RAIN AND SNOW.

The Storm Still Continues Over the State.

SAN FRANCISCO, Dec. 20.—It has been raining heavily throughout the Sacramento, Napa, and San Joaquin valleys, and snowing in the mountains at stations on the Central Pacific road as far as Truckee. In 24 hours 18 inches of snow fell at Cisco, and 18 at Summit. The Sacramento river rose seven feet in seventy-four hours.

SAN FRANCISCO, Dec. 20.—The Signal Service reports the rainfall in this city for the past 24 hours, ending at 8 o'clock this evening, as 1.62 inches. It has been raining heavily all day, and is still raining lightly. At Red Bluff 1.30 inches fell; at Sacramento, 1.32 inches. At the last two places a light rain is still falling. At Los Angeles .09 of an inch fell.

OROVILLE, Dec. 20.—The rainfall for the present storm is 4.65 inches. The storm continues. Feather river is rising rapidly.

VALLEJO, Cala., Dec. 20.—Rain has fallen steadily and heavily all day. No signs of abatement. Almost four-and-a-half hundredths inches have fallen during the present storm.

LIVERMORE, Cala., Dec. 20.—Total fall for storm, one and eight hundredths inches. Owing to the heavy early fall of rain in this valley the vineyardists will be able to begin deep plowing six weeks earlier than any previous season, and the acreage planted in grapes will be doubled. It is estimated it will reach one thousand acres.

MARYSVILLE, Cal., Dec. 20.—Three and eighty-one hundredths inches of rain for storm. Rain continues. The Yuba river has risen six feet two inches.

RIO VISTA, Cal., Dec. 20.—It has rained steadily most of the day, and is still raining.

STOCKTON, Dec. 20.—The rainfall up to ten o'clock to-night was two and twenty one-hundredths inches.

A Brutal Deed.

LIVERPOOL, December 20.—Inquiry has been begun by the American Consul into the case of second mate William Beasley and boatswain Frederick Koelpind of the American ship J. F. Chapman, from San Francisco, charged with murdering a Russian seaman named Jansen. The officers tied the man up by the arms to the fore rigging. He was left in that position for some time and then found dead. Thirteen of the crew were witnesses of the outrage. The case was adjourned.

A Valuable Christmas Gift.

SAN FRANCISCO, December 20.—Senator James G. Fair will present the Boys' and Girls' Aid Society with a building lot valued at $6,500, instead of his usual Christmas gift of a $3,000 check.

Convicted of Arson.

SAN FRANCISCO, December 20.—Edward Daigneau was sentenced this morning by Judge Toohy to ten years in States Prison. The prisoner was convicted of arson in the second degree for having fired his grocery on the 23d of December last.

Eight More Bodies Found in the Ruins.

SIXTY-ONE CHILDREN STILL MISSING.

Workmen Engaged in Searching the Ruins—Probability of More Bodies Being Found.

Associated Press Dispatches to The Times.

NEW YORK, Dec. 20.—A gang of fifteen laborers are working to-day on the ice-covered ruins of the burned Orphan Asylum in Brooklyn, searching for bodies. Temporary provision has been made in various Catholic institutions for the care and shelter of the children. A Coroner's jury was empanelled to-day, but the inquest was adjourned. The funeral of the victims will take place to-morrow and the interment will be in the Cemetery of the Holy Cross of Flatbush, Long Island. About noon, when the workmen had almost concluded there were no more bodies buried beneath the debris, they came upon a group of six more, all of which were burned to a crisp. This makes sixteen bodies recovered.

The Evening Post says: "Thus far sixteen bodies have been found. The workmen have not yet reached

Sheridan.

Following up and commending the malignant, bigoted and treason-inspired utterances of its anonymous correspondent, "Civis," regarding the Commander-in-Chief of the Army, the Los Angeles Herald proceeds to show the quality of its boasted "Unionism" by calling General Sheridan a "drunken little extremist," an "American Hayna," an "envenomed little whiffet," and applying other opprobrious epithets to a man and soldier whom millions of American people delight to honor, but whom conquered traitors and rebels naturally hate. These foul epithets are applied by a Democratic newspaper to one of the great trio of distinguished soldiers of the Union who won imperishable renown upon the battle-fields of the rebellion in defense of the country—a man who rose from a captaincy to the command of the army by merit alone; whose several promotions were for "gallant and meritorious conduct" or "for distinguished services" in the line of duty; a man whom an American President and an American Senate have proclaimed as good enough to be called to the highest military station in the Republic; a man whose honor has been assailed only or chiefly by enemies of the land for the preservation of which Sheridan fought with such distinguished success. It is a distinguishing trait of Democratic papers of the Herald's stamp that they will never forgive the leading Union Generals—Grant, Sherman, Sheridan and their compatriots—for having beaten that large wing of the Democratic party which, between 1861 and 1865, was organized under the name of the Confederate army. It was an unpardonable offense, for which there is no leniency in the Democratic editorial heart.

The Herald's abuse of General Sheridan is characteristically infamous and disgraceful, albeit impotent.

Sheridan lives in the hearts of his countrymen, and will live in history long after the memory of the Democratic party and its vituperative supporters has ceased to be even a putrid reminiscence.

Catholicism and Divorce.

Among the most commendable features of the Catholic Plenary Council, which recently assembled in Baltimore, was the decided stand which it took as a body against divorce, and the tendency of its teachings to "inspire holier reverence of the sacrament of marriage." In this respect Catholicism has always been a rebuke to Protestantism. Sternly and uncompromisingly has the Catholic Church of this, as well as of other countries, set its face against divorce and refused its sanction to a marriage where either one or both of the parties were divorced persons. In this way has the church ever been on the side of virtue and the sanctity of home. The frequency of, and the ease with which divorces are obtained is one of the most alarming tendencies of the times, and it is time that not only the church, but the public at large, lifted its voice in decided protest against it. The safety of the nation lies in the sanctity of its homes. If the children are here trained in habits of virtue and loyalty the future of the republic is safe. Without this, we cannot hope for a future, but must drift in a hopeless decline towards destruction. Freedom and free institutions must have law and not license. They must have purity and not vice for their foundation principles. There should be legislative action in this matter. The country cannot do much longer without a national divorce law. The secret divorce system should be done away with, and for none but just and sufficient reasons—that of unfaithfulness to marriage vows—should a divorce become possible with the privilege of marrying again. When this is done there will be fewer unhappy marriages—there will be less haste and more wisdom exercised. Marriage will then be not the matter of an idle whim or fleeting fancy; not an obligation that may be thrown aside as soon as it becomes irksome, or as some mere fancy takes possession of the mind, but a sacred and solemn compact that nothing but the inexorable hand of death can set aside or annul.

It is an honor to the Catholic church that its teachings are so steadfastly in this direction and towards this end. If Protestant ministers would stand side by side with the Catholic clergy on this great moral question it would be an advance that would herald a healthier public sentiment and the dawn of a better day.

THE Columbus Journal estimates that one hundred new saloons have started up in the capital of Ohio since the Scott law was overthrown. In Toledo, Youngstown, Dayton, Sandusky and in other cities the same is proportionately true. Furthermore, hundreds of saloons are being opened in the little towns and villages in the State. The Toledo Commercial-Telegram remarks thereon: "These are serious facts for the Prohibitionists to consider. If the starting of ten thousand new saloons gives them comfort, then they should feel comfortable indeed." Oh, it was a famous temperance victory, the election of Cleveland by the aid of Prohibition votes!

It is a painful fact to break to the lean, longing and hungry disciples of Democratic reform, but the truth is, nevertheless, that of the fifty thousand post-offices within the gift of the administration nearly half of them do not pay a salary of over fifty dollars a year. That is not a hopeful outlook for the army of office-seekers who have been fasting for the past twenty-four years.

As a great example of Democratic political economy, take for instance the way in which the municipal government of the Democratic city of New York is run. The debt of that city is only $88,863,579. No burdensome surplus in the treasury in that quarter.

THE SAUNTERER.

There are a great many deeds of cruelty which are the result of thoughtlessness. I saw one the other day. A farmer came in from the country with a load of poultry. The feet of the chickens were tied together and thus they were taken out from the wagon and thrown upon the sidewalk. The heads of some of the fowls fell over the curbing into the gutter, and there they were allowed to remain. It was one of our warmest days, and the sun beat down upon that pavement most mercilessly. But those poor birds were left to lie in that condition for hours upon the pavement, fettered, helpless, scorched, without food and without water. It was simply the refinement of cruelty, yet it was, I presume, the result of thoughtlessness. The world is full of just such happenings, with results of needless torture to dumb and helpless things. We should make thoughtfulness a duty. Heedlessness does not relieve us of responsibility.

A man brought some beautiful canaries into town on one of our coldest mornings last week. There was nothing thrown over the cages to keep them warm. They were taken from the wagon and carried into a sunless room and left there stiff with cold. There was some more refined and thoughtless torture for which that man was responsible. It was cruel, and I protest against it.

There is a feeling of benignant thankfulness existing in the hearts of the long-suffering community over the fact that light has broken at last over the Stygian darkness of the post-office. We can now clear clear of Scylla and avoid Charybdis, and visit the post-office after midnight without finding the air blue with curses and muttered maledictions. It is well.

On Wall street there lives a man who is a native of sunny France. He has a wife who also came from that land of vineyards and purple grapes. It is to be feared that they both take something sometimes that is stronger than water. Out of this grows domestic infelicity. They are considerate enough not to get drunk togeher, however. Thus the sober one has the opportunity to look with awful scorn upon the other. Brute, dog and drunkard are the tender epithets bestowed upon the offending spouse. The heavy cudgel is the weapon of warfare, and both alike have suffered from it.

Passing their home the other day the Saunterer saw the old man sitting upon its roof. He did not seem to be having a good time. Though the day was perfection and all nature was glad, he was not happy. "Whazzer mazzer down there?" he was calling to the wife of his bosom, who stood below on the ground with a huge cudgel and with violent gestures, which were suggestive of attack if she could only get within striking reach of the helpless, befuddled object on the roof. It was a striking illustration of domestic felicity, a painful sermon on the evil of intemperance. That strong, brawny man cowering in abject drunken terror to the roof of his home to escape the fury of an incensed wife was a pitiful commentary on the brutish tendencies of human nature when enslaved by drink and controlled by passion.

It is a pleasant thing to look into the happy faces of the people on the streets who are busy in making their Christmas purchases. They are like so many open books whose pages you can read at a glance, and each has its story.

I met a little girl the other day whom I knew and who was intent on buying something for "papa." She had but forty cents of her "very own," and what should she buy? How the beautiful things in the shop windows tempted her. With what eager eyes she looked. How much of longing there was in them. She peeped in at the grand Japanese art depot on Main street, where one finds an Oriental world of art in miniature, and then she wandered along with me down Spring street until we came to Brand & Bassett's, where everything for the holiday time is to be found, and Santa Claus surely must be hiding, with all the while that forty cents burning the little palm, and the loving heart not able to decide what it should buy from that great wilderness of pretty things it had seen all along the line. She peered into those windows with a look of fresh bewilderment. "There's everything in the world nice in this store," she said as she viewed the elegant display that satisfied far older eyes than her's, and then with a despairing look she asked: "O, what shall I buy for papa?" "Papa is a nice man because he has such a nice mustache cup," said I, putting a little more money into her hands. Her face was like the morning, and her eyes shone like the sun coming from behind a cloud. "O that will be splendid!" she cried with a ringing laugh that was as full of gladness as a bird's song, "for papa has a lovely mustache, but it's always in the way when he drinks his tea. I shall be so glad to s'prise him." So we looked about over the well-filled counters, and I helped her to select the simple yet dainty gift, and her heart was full of content the little one departed with her treasure, longing for the Christmas-time to come, so that she might "s'prise papa" with the precious gift.

Beautiful, loving childhood! may the happy Christmas-time bring you its most blessed benedictions.

What shall we say of those parents who rob their children of their childhood? I do not think that there are any worse thieves in community than those parents who, able to supply all of the needs of their children, yet for the sake of the little that they can earn, put them out to earn their daily bread, and deny them all the advantages of school training, and all the pleasures and pastimes that are children's rightful heritage. Yet we have just such parents right here in Los Angeles. I heard of a little girl the other day of only ten tender years who is "working out" as a kitchen servant. Yet she has a father and mother who should care for her and give her home shelter and home love. What a weary, hopeless, marred thing is a life that has no childhood! It is like a year without its Spring, like a Summer without its flowers, like a day without its sun, and a night without its stars. It is life in eclipse, and full of shadows.

I wish the matter of good sidewalks and crossings could be agitated until our street authorities were wearied into doing something more for this long-suffering community. What is the general condition of things after a rain? The crossings on most of the streets are simply beds of mud, the pavements are paved with a soft, oozy combination of dirt and water, of mush-like consistency, to encounter which stirs up all the tendencies to total depravity that are embodied in the heart of the unfortunate pedestrian. Not a single street in this city is properly paved for its entire length, and when we pass the few blocks possessing decent and substantial pavements, to the walks where mud runs riot and decent footing is not to be found, the contrast is only the more aggravating and exasperating. Give us better sidewalks throughout the principal business and residence portions of the city; give us crossings that are something more than beds of mire and the great army of mud-laden and mud besprinkled pedestrians will cry aloud from the sloughs and the sidewalks and crossings their hallelujahs and benedictions to those who work for them this great salvation.

O. W. CHILDS' TRACT.

Opinions of the Press Upon the Enterprise.

A NEW ENTERPRISE.

Opening of the O. W. Childs Tract.

From the Los Angeles Daily Times, Nov. 21.]

An important improvement and enterprise will be commenced in a few days on South Main street. The O. W. Childs tract, comprising six blocks lying between Main and San Pedro streets, is to be subdivided and placed on the market in lots. These lots, situated at the uniform rate of $600, are to be sold on a plan by which the buyer of a lot pays $50 down and $20 monthly installments for two-hundred-and-forty months, at the end of which time, or before, he pays up in full and receives a deed from Mr. Childs. The position of his lot is determined by chance, the matter being arranged by a committee selected by the shareholders, each shareholder having an equal opportunity at the expiration of six months, at which time the meeting for division takes place. The tract is to have new streets opened through it as speedily as possible, and every block will be lighted by an electric mast. The land is covered with fine deciduous and semi-tropical trees, and the property is considered among the most valuable outside the business portion of the town. There are many fine houses now on the tract. Water and sewer pipes can easily be laid, and the proprietor will spare no expense to make the enterprise a success. It is almost certain the lots will double in value w hin a year. The subscription books are to be opened this week. J. M. Duncan & Co., of the Diamond House, will act as agents.

VALUABLE REAL ESTATE.

The O. W. Childs Tract to be Divided and Placed on the Market.

From the Los Angeles Evening Express, Nov. 22.]

The O. W. Childs tract, which comprises six complete blocks and portions of three others, commencing at Main street, opposite the residence of O. W. Childs, and running back to San Pedro street, and now covered with orange trees and vines from fifteen to twenty years of age, is about to be divided into 200 building lots and disposed of in a manner that is sure to greatly improve that favorite portion of our city and enhance its value. The plan upon which these valuable lots will be sold is this: Subscriptions will be received at a uniform price of $600 per lot, at a certain time, to be fixed in the future, after these lots have been disposed of, a meeting of the subscribers will take place, their names will be written on slips of paper, and drawn from a box by some disinterested witness, and each subscriber will name his lot on the map as it is drawn. It is beyond question that some of these lots, more particularly those on corners, as well as those fronting on Main street, are worth two or three times $600, and it is thought that all of them are worth a little more that amount. The payments are made so easy that anyone with a situation will be able to meet them, the first being $50 and the balance at the rate of $25 per month. Six electric masts are to be erected on the tract at once. The disposal of so many splendid building locations in this manner will doubtless stimulate building in that section to a marked degree. A more detailed announcement of the plan will appear in the advertising columns of the Express next week. Messrs. J. M. Dewey & Co. will be the agents for Mr. Childs in obtaining the subscriptions.

New Homestead Enterprise.

From the Los Angeles Daily Herald, Nov. 21.]

One of the most feasible and at the same time one of the most practical and attractive homestead schemes that has ever been inaugurated in Southern California, is about matured, and will be fully explained in a few days in the advertising columns of the Herald. It consists in the subdivision of the Rosebank Childs tract, lying between South Main and San Pedro streets. This beautiful tract of well-matured citrus fruits and vines has been laid out into 200 lots, with streets and alleys, which will be put onto the market at the nominal price of $600 per lot, payable in easy installments. Some of the lots to-day are worth $1000 each, while none of them are worth less than the uniform price asked. At the end of six months the purchasers choose a committee to draw by lot for choice of lots, so there will be an equal chance for each purchaser to get a valuable lots already built upon. Six electric lights mast will be erected on the tract at once, which will illuminate the whole tract brilliantly, and will, with the beautiful orange groves, one of the most attractive residence localities in the city. The facilities for access, drainage, sewerage and water supply are of the highest order. The fact that many of our merchants, professional and business men have already selected homesteads on lots adjoining this beautiful tract and built up elegant homes will make this one of the choicest locations in the city. J. M. Dunean & Co., of the Diamond House, are agents for this property, and will be prepared to put them on the market in a few days. This homestead enterprise will revive the building boom in the residence portion of the city, and no doubt be a great success.

Sheridan.

Following up and commending the malignant, bigoted and treason-inspired utterances of its anonymous correspondent, "Civis," regarding the Commander-in-Chief of the Army, the Los Angeles Herald proceeds to show the quality of its boasted "Unionism" by calling General Sheridan a "drunken little extremist," an "American Haynau," an "envenomed little whiffet," and applying other opprobrious epithets to a man and soldier whom millions of American people delight to honor, but whom conquered traitors and rebels naturally hate. These foul epithets are applied by a Democratic newspaper to one of the great trio of distinguished soldiers of the Union who won imperishable renown upon the battle-fields of the rebellion in defense of the country—a man who rose from a captaincy to the command of the army by merit alone; whose several promotions were for "gallant and meritorious conduct" or "for distinguished services" in the line of duty; a man whom an American President and an American Senate have proclaimed as good enough to be called to this highest military station in the Republic; a man whose honor has been impeached, whose character has been assailed only or chiefly by enemies of the land for the preservation of which Sheridan fought with such distinguished success. It is a distinguishing trait of Democratic papers of the Herald's stamp that they will never forgive the leading Union Generals—Grant, Sherman, Sheridan and their compatriots—for having beaten that large wing of the Democratic party which, between 1861 and 1865, was organized under the name of the Confederate army. It was an unpardonable offense, for which there is no leniency in the Democratic editorial heart.

The Herald's abuse of General Sheridan is characteristically infamous and disgraceful, albeit impotent.

Sheridan lives in the hearts of his countrymen, and will live in history long after the memory of the Democratic party and its vituperative supporters has ceased to be even a putrid reminiscence.

Catholicism and Divorce.

Among the most commendable features of the Catholic Plenary Council, which recently assembled in Baltimore, was the decided stand which it took as a body against divorce, and the tendency of its teachings to "inspire holier reverence of the sacrament of marriage." In this respect Catholicism has always been a rebuke to Protestantism. Sternly and uncompromisingly has the Catholic Church of this, as well as of other countries, set its face against divorce and refused its sanction to a marriage where either one or both of the parties were divorced persons. In this way has the church ever been on the side of virtue and the sanctity of home. The frequency of, and the ease with which divorces are obtained is one of the most alarming tendencies of the times, and it is time that not only the church, but the public at large, lifted its voice in decided protest against it. The safety of the nation lies in the sanctity of its homes. If the children are here trained in habits of virtue and loyalty the future of the republic is safe. Without this, we cannot hope for a future, but must drift in a hopeless decline towards destruction. Freedom and free institutions must have law and not license. They must have purity and not vice for their foundation principles. There should be legislative action in this matter. The country cannot do much longer without a national divorce law. The secret divorce system should be done away with, and for none but just and sufficient reasons—that of unfaithfulness to marriage vows—should a divorce become possible with the privilege of marrying again. When this is done there will be fewer unhappy marriages—there will be less haste and more wisdom exercised. Marriage will then be not the matter of an idle whim or fleeting fancy; not an obligation that may be thrown aside as soon as it becomes irksome, or as some mere fancy takes possession of the mind, but a sacred and solemn compact that nothing but the inexorable hand of death can set aside or annul.

It is an honor to the Catholic church that its teachings are so steadfastly in this direction and towards this end. If Protestant ministers would stand side by side with the Catholic clergy on this great moral question it would be an advance that would herald a healthier public sentiment and the dawn of a better day.

THE Columbus Journal estimates that one hundred new saloons have started up in the capital of Ohio since the Scott law was overthrown. In Toledo, Youngstown, Dayton, Sandusky and in other cities the same is proportionately true. Furthermore, hundreds of saloons are being opened in the little towns and villages in the State. The Toledo Commercial-Telegram remarks thereon: "These are serious facts for the Prohibitionists to consider. If the starting of ten thousand new saloons gives them comfort, then they should feel comfortable indeed." Oh, it was a famous temperance victory, the election of Cleveland by the aid of Prohibition votes!

IT is a painful fact to break to the lean, longing and hungry disciples of Democratic reform, but the truth is, nevertheless, that of the fifty thousand post-offices within the gift of the administration nearly half of them do not pay a salary of over fifty dollars a year. That is not a hopeful outlook for the army of office-seekers who have been fasting for the past twenty-four years.

As a great example of Democratic political economy, take for instance the way in which the municipal government of the Democratic city of New York is run. The debt of that city is only $48,863,579. No burdensome surplus in the treasury in that quarter.

THE SAUNTERER.

There are a great many deeds of cruelty which are the result of thoughtlessness. I saw one the other day. A farmer came in from the country with a load of poultry. The feet of the chickens were tied together and thus they were taken out from the wagon and thrown upon the sidewalk. The heads of some of the fowls fell over the curbing into the gutter, and there they were allowed to remain. It was one of our warmest days, and the sun beat down upon that pavement most mercilessly. But those poor birds were left to lie in that condition for hours upon the pavement, fettered, helpless, scorched, without food and without water. It was simply the refinement of cruelty, yet it was, I presume, the result of thoughtlessness. The world is full of just such happenings, with results of needless torture to dumb and helpless things. We should make thoughtfulness a duty. Heedlessness does not relieve us of responsibility.

A man brought some beautiful canaries into town on one of our coldest mornings last week. There was nothing thrown over the cages to keep them warm. They were taken from the wagon and carried into a sunless room and left there stiff with cold. There was some more refined and thoughtless torture for which that man was responsible. It was cruel, and I protest against it.

There is a feeling of benignant thankfulness existing in the hearts of the long-suffering community over the fact that light has broken at last over the Stygian darkness of the post-office. We can now steer clear of Scylla and avoid Charybdis, and visit the post-office after midnight without finding the air blue with curses and muttered maledictions. It is well.

On Wall street there lives a man who is a native of sunny France. He has a wife who also came from that land of vineyards and purple grapes. It is to be feared that they both take something sometimes that is stronger than water. Out of this grows domestic infelicity. They are considerate enough not to get drunk together, however. Thus the solace one has the opportunity to look with awful scorn upon the other. Brute, dog and drunken fool are the tender epithets bestowed upon the offending spouse. The heavy cudgel is the weapon of warfare, and both alike have suffered from it.

Passing their house the other day the Saunterer saw the old man sitting upon its roof. He did not seem to be having a good time. Though the day was particularly cold all nature was gay, he was not happy. "Whazzer mazzer down there?" he was calling to the wife of his bosom, who stood below on the ground with a huge cudgel and with violent gestures, which were suggestive of battle if she could only get within striking reach of the helpless, befuddled object on the roof. It was a striking illustration of domestic feliecity, a painful sermon on the evil of intemperance. That strong, brawny man entwined in abject drunken terror to the roof of his home to escape the fury of an incensed wife was a pitiful commentary on the brutish tendencies of human nature when enslaved by drink and controlled by passion.

It is a pleasant thing to look into the happy faces of the people on the streets who are busy in making their Christmas purchases. They are like so many open books whose pages you can read at a glance, and each has its story.

I met a little girl the other day whom I knew and who was intent on buying something for "papa." She had but forty cents of her "very own," and what should she buy? How the beautiful things in the shop windows tempted her. With what eager eye she looked. How much of longing there was in them. She peeped in at the grand Japanese art depot on Main street, where one finds the Oriental world of art in miniature, and then she wandered along with me down Spring street until we came to Brand & Bassett's, where everything for the holiday time is to be found, and Santa Claus surely must be hiding, with all the while that forty cents burning the little palm, and the loving heart not able to decide what it should buy from that great wilderness of pretty things it had seen all along the line. She peered into these windows with a look of fresh bewilderment. "There's everything in the world nice in this store," she said as she viewed the elegant display that satisfied far older eyes than her's, and then with a despairing look she asked: "O, what shall I buy for papa?" "I get papa a nice moustache cup," said I, putting a little more money into her hands. Her face was like the morning, and her eyes shone like the sun coming from behind a cloud. "O that will be splendid!" she cried—with a voice that was as full of gladness as a bird's—"for papa has a lovely mustache, but it's always in the way when he drinks his tea. I shall be so glad to s'prise him." So we looked about over the well-filled counters, and I helped her to select the simple yet dainty gift, and with heart full of content the little one departed with her treasure, longing for the Christmas-time to come, so that she might "s'prise papa" with the precious gift.

Beautiful, loving childhood! may the happy Christmastide bring you its most blessed benedictions.

What shall we say of those parents who rob their children of their childhood? I do not think that there are any worse thieves in community than those parents who, able to supply all of the needs of their children, yet for the sake of the little that they can earn, put them out to earn their daily bread, and deny them all the advantages of school training, and all the pleasures and pastimes that are children's rightful heritage. Yet we have just such parents right here in Los Angeles. I heard of a little girl the other day of only ten tender years who is "working out" as a kitchen servant. Yet she has a father and mother who should care for her and give her home shelter and home love. What a weary, hopeless, marred thing is a life that has no childhood! It is like a year without its Spring, like a Summer without its flowers, like a day without its sun, and a night without its stars. It is life in eclipse, and full of shadows.

I wish the matter of good sidewalks and crossings could be agitated until our street authorities were wearied into doing something more for this long-suffering community. What is the general condition of things after a rain? The crossings on most of the streets are simply beds of mud, the pavements are paved with a soft, oozy combination of dirt and water, of mush-like consistency, to encounter which stirs up all the tendencies to total depravity that are embodied in the heart of the unfortunate pedestrian. Not a single street in this city is properly paved for its entire length, and when we pass the few blocks possessing decent and substantial pavements, to the walks where mud runs riot and decent footing is not to be found, the contrast is only the more aggravating and exasperating. Give us better sidewalks throughout the principal business and residence portions of the city; give us crossings that are something more than beds of mire and the great army of mud-laden and mud besprinkled pedestrians will lay aloud from the sloughs and the sidewalks and crossings their hallelujahs and benedictions to those who work for them this great salvation.

O. W. CHILDS' TRACT.

Opinions of the Press Upon the Enterprise.

A NEW ENTERPRISE.

Opening of the O. W. Childs Tract.

From the Los Angeles Daily Times, Nov. 21.]

An important improvement and enterprise will be commenced in a few days on South Main street. The O. W. Childs tract, comprising six blocks lying between Main and San Pedro streets, is to be subdivided and placed on the market in lots. These lots, valued at the uniform rate of $200, are to be sold on a plan by which the buyer of a lot pays $20 down and $20 monthly installments for twenty-two months, at the end of which time, or before, he pays up in full and receives a deed from Mr. Childs. The position of his lot is determined by chance, the matter being arranged by a committee selected by the shareholders, each shareholder having an equal opportunity at the expiration of six months, at which time the meeting for division takes place. The tract is to have new streets cut out through it as speedily as possible, and every lot sold will be lighted by a electric arc. The land is covered with the deciduous and semi-tropical trees, and the property is considered among the most valuable outside the business portion of the town. There are many fine houses now on the tract. Water and sewer pipes can also be had, and the improvement will spare no expense to make the enterprise a success. It is almost certain the lots will double in value wi hin a year. The subscription books are to be opened this week J. M. Duncan & Co., of the Diamond House, will act as agents.

VALUABLE REAL ESTATE.

The O. W. Childs Tract to be Divided and Placed on the Market.

From the Los Angeles Evening Express, Nov. 22.]

The O. W. Childs tract, which comprises six complete blocks and portions of twelve others, commencing at Main street, opposite the residence of O. W. Childs, and running back to San Pedro street, and now covered with orange trees and vines from fifteen to twenty years of age, is about to be divided into 200 building lots and disposed of in a manner that is sure to greatly improve that favorite portion of our city and enhance its value. The plan upon which these valuable lots will be sold is this: Subscriptions will be received at the uniform price of $200 per lot, at a certain time, to be fixed in the future, after these lots have been disposed of, a meeting of the subscribers will take place, their names will be written on slips of paper, and drawn from a box by some disinterested witness, and each subscriber will receive his lot on the map as it is drawn. It is beyond question that some of these lots, more particularly those on corners, as well as those fronting on Main street, are worth two or three times $200, and it is thought that all of them are worth at least that amount. The payments are made so easy that anyone with a situation will be able to meet them, the first being $20 and the balance at the rate of $25 per month. Six electric lights are to be erected on the tract at once. The disposal of so many splendid building locations in this manner will doubtless stimulate building in that section to a marked degree. A more detailed announcement of the plan will appear in the advertising columns of the Times next week. Messrs. H. J. Brunt & Co. will be the agents for Mr. Childs in obtaining the subscriptions.

New Homestead Enterprise.

From the Los Angeles Daily Herald, Nov. 23.]

One of the most feasible and at the same time one of the most practical and attractive homestead schemes that has ever been inaugurated in Southern California, is about matured, and will be fully explained in a few days in the advertising columns of the Herald. It consists in the subdivision of the celebrated Childs tract, lying between South Main and San Pedro streets. This beautiful tract of well-situated, fertile land contains 200 lots and is laid out into $50 lots, with streets and alleys, which will be put onto the market at the nominal price of $200 per lot, payable in easy installments. Some of the lots to-day are worth $1000 each, while none of them are worth less than the uniform price stated. At the end of six months the purchasers choose a committee of three, who draw for choice of lots, so there will be an equal chance for each purchaser to get the valuable lots already built upon. Six electric light masts will be erected on the tract at once, which will illuminate the tract brilliantly and make it, with the beautiful orange groves, one of the most attractive residence localities in the city. The facilities for access, drainage, sewerage and water supply are of the highest order. The fact that many of our mechanics, professional and business men have already selected homesteads on lots adjoining this beautiful tract and built up elegant homes will make this one of the choicest locations in the city. J. M. Duncan & Co., of the Diamond House, are agents for this new homestead enterprise, and will be prepared to put them on the market in a few days. This homestead enterprise will revive the building boom in the residence portion of the city, and no doubt be a great success.

There is a land where every pulse is thrilling
With rapture earth's sojourners may not know;
Where sorrow's repose the weary heart is stilling,
And peacefully life's time-tossed currents flow.

Far out of sight, while yet the flesh infolds us,
Like the fair country where our hearts abide,
Lies the bliss is sought more wondrous told us
Than these few words—"I shall be satisfied."

Satisfied! Satisfied! The spirit's yearning
For sweet companionship with kindred spirits,
The silent love that here meets no returning;
The aspiration which no language limits.

Shall they be satisfied? The soul's vague longing—
The aching void which nothing earthly fills?
Oh! what desires upon my soul are thronging,
As I look upward to the heavenly hills.

Thither my weak and weary steps are tending—
Savior and Lord! with thy frail child abide!
Guide me toward Home, where all my wanderings ending,
I shall see thee, and "shall be satisfied."

JARVIS.

BY MARY ADAMS JAMESON.

XXVIII.

ABDICATION.

Daniels did not see Jarvis again till the next morning at their 8 o'clock breakfast. He talked but little, and did not refer to yesterday's denouement. His face wore that look of calm majesty, which he had occasionally seen upon it before.

By a law in physics just before the explosion of a boiler, the material of which it is made seems to expand and fairly quiver with the dilation of inner forces. So the whole body of Jarvis seemed alive with the electric vibrations of some vivifying internal principle, which shaped and moulded it into grandeur of beauty that made it a kingly presence. Jennings noticed the change in Jarvis as soon as they had entered the office, and thought what a remarkable duplication of father and son, the most remarkable he had known in his long life. Jarvis waited for no preliminaries but went straight to the point.

"I cannot say that I am glad, sir, of the honor you would thrust upon me; but I am glad to know at last who my friends were and to what nation they belonged. I shall always feel kinder toward England for this knowledge, but America cradled my childhood and fostered my manhood; I can claim no other fatherland but her. I have not decided so grave a matter as the one in question, without first asking His counsel and guidance; and I have received such positive and direct assurance here," laying his hand on his heart, "that I can no longer doubt what course I ought to pursue. Yet you have been most faithful to my father's interests, and I thank you in his name; but He will reward you in his own time and way. If for a moment I fancied that with such vast wealth and such an exalted position at my command I might do a good stroke of work for Him, it was a trick of the devil, sir, a trick of the devil. He would like to trip me into hell by means of an earl's coronet. His satanic majesty is ambitious to have a sprinkling of titled subjects. Again I would be utterly unworthy of my father's race and the manhood in me, if I could accept the splendor of those titled estates and drive Lady Dunmore—

"Damn her ladyship! serve her right," cried the irate solicitor.

"Lady Dunraven and her son from his door," continued Jarvis without heeding the interruption. "They are my kindred and the money would burn my palms that I would wrest from their grasp. They are fitted for the high station in which they have lived, as I am fitted for mine of low degree. Therefore," solemnly lifting his right hand, "in the name of Him, in whom I trust—the despised Nazarene, I renounce it."

"You are mad, sir, mad, I say, to throw away your birthright for a mess of pottage," cried Jennings, jumping to his feet.

"[renounce," shaking himself as though rolling from him a heavy burden, "all my rights to the landed estates, titles, moneys and other property, personal and real, of the late Earl of Dunraven in favor of Lord George, my next of kin. Write to that effect."

There was no appeal from the grave, set face before him. Jennings, with frequent ejaculatory protests, hastily wrote out a formula of abdication, to which Jarvis affixed his signature; Daniels subscribed as a witness, and the solicitor stamped upon it his official seal. The renunciation was complete. Then he turned on their mission of love—these two men so closely united by an indissoluble bond. They spent a year in traversing the by-ways and out-of-the-way nooks of the continent; visited the principal cities and watering-places, searched hotel-registers everywhere, and finally one dusky evening, dusty and travel-worn, they rolled into Paris and drove straight to the Hotel de Ville.

Daniels had telegraphed for rooms, and on entering their apartments he found a letter and a paper from New York awaiting his arrival. The paper contained this marked paragraph:

"WEDDING IN HIGH LIFE.—At Glenview, Tennessee, in St. John's Church, by the Reverend Gray Malcolm, assisted by the Reverend Marmion Caruthers, Miss Bruce Leyton of New York to Miss Helen Campbell, late leading soprano in St. Paul's Cathedral, this city."

The little note was from Bruce Leyton. Only the closing sentences could be of any interest to the reader:

"I will now own you were right, although your prophetic utterance once left me sorely. Of all fair women I have known, there is none so fair to me as the pure, sweet girl, who is my wife. I forget our united love, with the wish that you may yet be supremely happy, even as we are. LEYTON."

XXIX.

THE GROOVE WIDENS.

Time was very precious to these two, beating heart's-ease in a world-wide shadow. In accordance with the plan previously followed, they started out immediately after breakfast on a tour of inspection of hotel registers, hoping to gain some clue, by which to guide them in their search. They passed arm in arm down the broad staircase and out into the clear sunshine of a Parisian sky, heedless of the jostling crowd, and speaking in low, earnest tones.

As they crossed the outer court Jarvis was saying:

"If I bee a conviction here," laying his hand on his heart, "that He is leading us to her. I dunno His time nor way o' bringin' it about, but I feel sure we may be nearer the end of our search than we know. However that may be, it is all right. My faith and love in Him never was stronger nor more comfortin' than this mornin'."

Suddenly there was an outcry in the street, and quickening their steps they met a span of powerfully built horses dashing madly down the street towards them, their faces wild with terror and every nerve quivering. They drew a carriage, which seemed to spin in mid-air, and as it came nearer one could see that it was occupied by a lady and three children. The coachman's seat was vacant and the ribbons were dragging along the ground. The street was closed for repairs; they could wheel down the Rue Rivoli with its tangled labyrinth of narrow lanes, and certain disaster must follow. The crowd seemed paralyzed. Jarvis took in the situation, and, before Daniels could divine his purpose, sprang into the middle of the street, while a hundred voices shouted: "Stand back; you'll be trampled down." As the maddened horses reached him, he grasped each by the bit and hung there, swinging in mid-air like the pendulum of a clock, while they reared and plunged in their frantic efforts to free themselves from his powerful grasp. A moment later they saw him go down; no one knew exactly how it happened.

A dozen men had sprung to the rescue; the horses made a desperate lunge forward, striking him down under their hoofs and under the wheels.

A hasty examination showed that he was still breathing, though the pulsations could scarcely be felt. They tenderly lifted the crushed body and bore it back into the office from which he had so recently emerged in the prime of his strength. They laid it upon a mattress on the floor to await the examination of the best surgical skill of the city. Meanwhile the lady had partially recovered from her fright and gave briefly the particulars of the accident. They had stopped at a bric-a-brac shop, and having returned to the carriage, the coachman was about to mount to his place, when the horses became frightened at a passing hand-organ and sprang away, hurling him to the ground and dragging him some distance as he clung to the lines.

She now requested to see their deliverer that she might thank him in person for so heroic an act. When told that he was probably fatally injured, she expressed the deepest sorrow and begged some one to give her all the information they could concerning him.

A gentleman doffed his hat and stepped from the crowd.

"Madam! very little is known about him! He, accompanied by a friend, arrived from London last night, and they are stopping at the Hotel de Ville yonder. The extent of his injuries cannot be known till after the examination of the surgeons. If you will give me your address and allow me, I will do myself the honor of delivering in person the result of the examination."

"Thanks! you are very kind, but I will not put you to that trouble. It will be a self-imposed duty to call and receive the verdict myself. Any service, however great, that I might be able to render, would be a very poor recompense for so great a debt of gratitude."

By this time the coachman had reached the scene, looking greatly relieved that no harm had befallen those under his charge, and cast a deprecating look toward the lady.

"I hope, Miss, you'll not be too hard on me; it was the grindin' thing that scared 'em."

"No, Parker, I do not blame you, you are usually a very careful driver and this was something you could not foresee. You may drive straight home now," and, bowing graciously, they swept away toward the American quarters.

WHERE WHITTIER LIVES.

A Delightful Pen Portrait of the Poet and His Pleasant Home.

Harriet Prescott Spofford, in the Critic.]

Mr. Whittier's dwelling in Amesbury is exceedingly simple and exquisitely neat, the exterior of a pale cream color, with many trees and shrubs about it, while, within, one room opens into another till you reach the study that should be haunted by the echoes of all sweet sounds, for here has been written the most of those verses full of the fitful music,

"Of winds that out of dreamland blew."

Here, in the proper season, the flames of a cheerful fire dance upon the brass andirons of the open hearth, in the center of a wall lined with books; water colors by Harry Fenn, Lucy Larcom and Celia Thaxter, together with interesting prints, hang on the other walls, rivaled, it may be, by a window that looks down a sunny little orchard, and by the glass-topped door through which you see the green domes of Powow hill. What worthies have been entertained in this enticing place! Garrison, and Phillips, and Higginson, and Wasson, and Emerson, and Fields, and Bayard Taylor, and Alice and Phoebe Cary, and Gail Hamilton, and Anna Dickinson are only a few of the names that one first remembers, to say nothing of countless sweet souls unknown to any other roll of fame than heaven's, who have found the atmosphere kindred to their own.

The people of Amesbury and of the adjoining villages and towns feel a peculiar ownership of their poet; there is scarcely a legend of all the region round which he has not woven into his song, and the neighborhood feel not only as if Whittier were their poet, but in some way the guardian spirit, the genius of the place. Perhaps in this stern and sweet life he has been so, even as much as in his song.

"There is no charge to Mr. Whittier," once said a shopman of whom he had made a small purchase, and there is no doubt that the example would have been contagious if the independent spirit of the poet would ever have allowed it.

These Indian summer days of the poet's life are spent not all in the places that knew him of old. The greater part of the winter is passed in Boston; a share of the summer always goes to the White hills, of which he is passionately fond, and the remainder of the time finds him in the house of his cousins at Oak Knoll, in Danvers still in his native county of Essex. This is a mansion, with its porches and porticos and surrounding lawns and groves, which seems meet for a poet's home. It stands in spacious and secluded grounds shadowed by mighty oaks, and with that woodland character which birds and squirrels and rabbits darting in the checkered sunshine must always give. It is the home of culture and refinement, too, and as full of beauty within as without. Here many of the later poems have been put forth, and here fledglings have the unwarrantable impertinence to intrude their callow manuscripts, and here those pests of prominence, the autograph seekers, send their requests by the thousands. But in the early fall the poet steals quietly back to Amesbury, and there awaits election day—a period in which he religiously believes that no man has a right to avoid his duty, and of which he still thinks as when he saw—

"Along the street
The shadows meet
Of Destiny, whose hands conceal
The molds of fate
That shape the state,
And make or mar the common weal."

What a life he has to look back upon as he sits with his fame about him—what storms and what delights, what struggle and what victory! With all the deep and wonderful humanity of spirit that he bears before God and man, yet it is doubtful if he could find one day in it that he would change, so far as his own acts are concerned. It is certain that no one else could find it.

In appearance Mr. Whittier is as upright in bearing as ever. His eye is as black and burns with as keen a fire as when it flashed over the Concord mob, and sees beauty everywhere as freshly as when he cried with the "Voices of Freedom" and sang the "Song of Labor," and his smile is the same smile that has won the worship of men, and of women, too, for sixty years and over. Now, it is with a sort of tenderness that people speak and think of him whose walk will, perhaps, go but little further with their own; not that they deem such vitality and power and spirit can ever cease, but that they are warned of its apothecosis, as it were, into loftier regions, where his earthly songs shall be turned to the music of the morning stars as they sing together.

A Frog's Gratitude.

A writer in Nature says: Last night I rescued a frog from the claws of a cat, and to my great surprise it turned, and, after gazing at me for a few seconds, jumped slightly toward me, halting after each leap, and looking up into my face. It thus gradually approached, and in about two or three minutes had actually climbed upon one of my feet. Its mute appeal for protection was most remarkable and could not possibly be misunderstood.

LUCKY DRAMATIC HITS.

Brief Biographies of a Few Stage Favorites.

CALIFORNIA AS A DRAMATIC ALMA MATER.

Mary Anderson—Lotta—Mrs. Agnes Booth—Frank Mayo—John McCullough—Edwin Booth.

Written for the TIMES.]

Many of the leading actors and actresses of the day and in the immediate past are and have been of California engendering. First in fortune and popularity is

MARY ANDERSON.

Mary was born in Sacramento, California, in 1859, and was quite young when her parents migrated to Louisville, Kentucky, which city has been claimed by her as her home, and was supposed, by a majority of her admirers, to be her birthplace. Her father, a Southerner, became a colonel in the Confederate service, and after a few months of active duty was killed in battle. From a child, she had a penchant for acting, and used the family parlor for a stage, and wrapping about her diminutive self all the old shawls and scarfs she could get, strutted about, imagining herself a "Romeo," a "Richard," or a "Hamlet." It was observed by her mother that she had a singular preference for male characters. Even then her voice was as sonorous, round and full as that of a boy. From this precocious commencement she advanced to her debut in 1875 on the stage. Her first appearances were crude, of course, but they were full of promise, and secured her further encouragement. She began the study of three or four parts, beginning, as all novices do, with the most difficult of all, that of "Juliet," in which character two years after she made her debut at Louisville. She played a second time in the same city. She then went to St. Louis and placed herself under the tuition and management of John W. Norton, to whom she is indebted for her present position, not that Norton gave her the fine voice that she has, but he taught her how to manage it, and gave her the mechanical part of the dramatic profession. Her great talents were born with her. After making a great success in St. Louis, she went to Cincinnati and New Orleans, winning golden opinions from the most captious critics of the press of those cities. She played the entire circuit of the Southern cities for two years, and in the meantime the people of the East grew quite accustomed to the reports of the newspapers of that section that Mary Anderson was to take the place of Charlotte Cushman upon our stage. Finally, on November 12th, 1877, she made her first appearance in New York, where she made an impression only in one part—that of "Parthenia" in Ingomar, the Barbarian—by no means a remarkable impression at that. The general verdict of the critics of New York was that she was a beautiful and very talented girl, but as an actress crude and immature, and seriously in want of "a school." She has gone on improving in experience and in art since, and she is to-day one of the most interesting figures on the stage. Some critics, however, hold that there is no depth in her impersonations. She reads well, and acts with intelligence, though coldly, and she is beautiful enough to be worth seeing as a manifestation of physical development alone. People rave about her of course. There are always plenty of weak souls ready to gush at the first opportunity about a handsome face and a splendid figure. But all the praise from the gentlemen of the press, or the lavish applause of the young men, do not make her a better actress any more than abuse could make her a bad woman. Be this as it may, Mary Anderson is the fashion. She has got the public at her command as such as she has made a fortune. Her great success in London has been phenomenal. Her society is courted. The Prince of Wales and the nobility have vied with each other as to who could do her the most honor. Critics may disagree as to her merits. Cary, and Gail Hamilton, and Anna Dickinson are only a few of the names that one first remembers, to say nothing of countless sweet souls unknown to any other roll of fame than heaven's, who have found the atmosphere kindred to their own.

The Prince of Wales and the nobility have vied with each other as to who could do her the most honor. Critics may disagree as to her merits, but one matter is a fixed fact, and that is, she is to-day the greatest favorite and most popular actress that speaks the English language. If offers of marriages from men of wealth and distinction; if baleful notices of newspapers; if large amounts of money for her professional services mean anything, then our California girl may be justly pronounced "a most decided hit."

LOTTA,

whose real name is Crabtree, comes next in order as a California development. Though born in New York Lotta made her first essay in the "Golden State." She first appeared in San Francisco at "Gilbert's Melodeon," where she played the banjo and sang comic songs. John H. Stackpole soon wanted just such a person, so he engaged her for the character of "Tartarine" in the spectacular drama of "The Seven Sisters." Now, Lotta never appeared on a legitimate stage till John Stackpole put her on it in a proper manner. She proved a great success. Lotta went East. Her manager played her in the Western theaters and also in Washington. At length she appeared in New York. The place was Wallack's Theater. It was taken in the summer time when the play-going people are supposed to be out of town. The fences, walls, and windows were abundantly billed and pictured with Lotta. She proved a great and a new sensation. She came, she saw, she conquered. John Brougham christened her "The Dramatic Cocktail." From that time up to the present date Lotta has been a pronounced and profitable attraction. She counts her dollars by hundreds of thousands. Her success in London the present year has been a confirmed fact. Lotta has returned to her "brown-stone front" in New York. She is a good daughter and a grateful woman. She did not forget the city of her early struggles (San Francisco), for she has placed on Market street a fountain, which will endure long after the founder shall have passed away.

MRS. AGNES BOOTH.

Mrs. Booth is another actress of California development. Her maiden name was Rookes. She was born in Sydney, New South Wales, in 1843. As a fourteen-year-old girl she began earning a living upon the stage as a dancer, and in 1858 she abandoned Sydney for San Francisco, then a more tempting field for the amusement profession. She joined Mrs. John Wood's company. She separated from Mrs. Wood and became a member of that of "Maguire's Opera House," a connection which she continued to hold till 1865, which was her last appearance in the Golden State. In 1865 she married the popular actor Harry Perry, and during her early career she played under his name. Her husband died a year after their marriage. Crossing the Isthmus in the summer of 1866, Mrs. Agnes Perry made her debut in New York in that year. Her success was so pronounced that she effected an engagement for the support of Edwin Forrest, appearing as "Julie," in Richelieu, at Niblo's Garden. She married Junius Brutus Booth shortly after, and thenceforth assumed his name, by which she is best known. In succeeding engagements she confirmed her position as an actress of rare intelligence and sincere artistic spirit, and her reputation is now assured.

FRANK MAYO

is another California production. Frank Mayo McGuire, as the latter name is his proper one, was born in Boston, but came out to 'Frisco when but a small boy. For want of better employment he went to work in a restaurant on Kearney street, but, like most youth's of his temperament, he was fond of the theater; so Frank "went on" as a "supe" for a while till he was intrusted with a few lines. He gradually rose in his profession to the leading parts, and became a first-class melo-dramatic actor. He went East and essayed such characters as "Hamlet," "Richard" and "Macbeth," but failed to convince the public that he was equal to the occasion. At length he got "a piece" entitled Davy Crockett. It had an immense run in New York, and was then "put on the road." It was a great success in a dramatic and financial point of view. The actor has reaped a fortune out of the play, but the poor author made but little by it. His name was Hitchcock, an actor, and he played under the name of Murdock, being a cousin of the noted actor of that name. Thus it is, the man who makes the gold watch seldom ever wears one. The man who weaves the fine black cloth never wears a coat of it. Such is life.

JOHN M'CULLOUGH

is another California dramatic development. John was a chairmaker in Philadelphia in his younger days. He began at the lowest round of the dramatic ladder, "going on" the stage in small parts. He was a careful actor and soon drew the attention of Edwin Forrest, who gave him an engagement and instruction, and ended by taking McCullough with him on his professional tours. He soon became his support in leading characters. John accompanied Forrest to the Pacific Slope and acted with him during his stay in California. McCullough remained in San Francisco and became a great favorite both on and off the stage. Ralston, the banker, loaned John $10,000 with which he opened the California Theater in partnership with Lawrence Barrett, but lost it in the speculation. He surrounded himself with a fine company, but it was of no avail. Fortune was against him and McCullough turned his face East. He played star engagements South and West, but did not meet with much encouragement till in a happy hour he met and joined fortune with his manager and friend, William M. Connor. The first great success in a commercial point of view was at St. Louis. From that time till about eighteen months ago Fortune gave him all he dared to hope for. Fame and coin were showered upon him, but McCullough was too good a fellow. His social qualities were his ruin. Late suppers, etc., proved too much for him, and poor, warm-hearted, genial John is now physically and mentally a wreck, wandering about the country in the false delusion that he must act, when he is entirely unfit for any place but an insane asylum.

EDWIN BOOTH

is another man to rise to fame and fortune by "a lucky hit." He made his first appearance on the stage at the Boston Museum in 1849. The company being short, he was induced to take the part at short notice. On the eventful night the elder Booth was to play Richard the Third. The old man was dressed for the part, with his feet upon the table of his dressing room. Before going on the stage he commenced interrogating in that hard, laconic style he could so seriously assume, "Who is Tressel?"

"A messenger from the battle-field."

"What was his mission?"

"To bear the news of the defeat of the King's party."

"How did he make the journey?"

"On horseback."

"Where are your spurs?"

Edwin glanced down and said he had not thought of them.

"Here, take mine." Edwin unbuckled his father's spurs and fastened them on his own boots. His part being ended on the stage, he found his father still in his dressing room, apparently engrossed in thought!

"How's business?" he asked.

"I think I have," replied Edwin.

"Give me my spurs," rejoined his father, and immediately young Tressel replaced the spurs on his father's feet. Such was the beginning of Edwin Booth's first acting. From that time forward Edwin traveled with his father, acting as his dresser and constant companion.

One night in New York, in 1851, his father was announced as "Richard," but in the evening after they had started for the theater, he suddenly changed his mood and mind, saying he was too ill to act. Edwin suggested he should rouse himself to the effort, but no argument could move him. "What will they do without you, father?" said the son in despair. "Go on and act it yourself," was the curt reply. So he dressed himself in his father's clothes. No apology had been made, and the astonished auditors allowed the play to proceed. Edwin, who had absorbed much of his own being every look, word and tone of his father, soon won from the audience a gratified applause. Edwin returned to the hotel. He was questioned coldly by his father as to his success. He pretended to his son that he had not left his room, but now he believes that the old man had witnessed the whole performance of "Richard" as well as that of "Tressel" on a previous occasion, and was not dissatisfied with the result. That Edwin Booth to-day is the greatest actor in the English-speaking language there can be no doubt. It was in California's early days that the elder Booth, accompanied by his son, visited San Francisco, and it was here that he developed into what the world has acknowledged him to be—a master of his art. Edwin has often said to the writer that he owed his good fortune to the San Francisco people for their kind support and indulgence of his first start in point of fame and fortune. With regard to his acting, his great powers have been acknowledged by the London, Berlin and Vienna public. Booth is seen to best advantage in those characters which appeal to our higher emotions and our finer perceptions. But he is also obviously successful in dealing with those motives and actions which lie near ordinary life and common experience. Take him, for instance, in his masterly impersonations of "Richard the Third," "Iago" or "Bertuccio," and we have a striking illustration of how far a powerful realism may make art and nature appear one and the same thing. In my opinion "Iago" is his best part, not excepting his great portrayal of "Hamlet."

DR. KANE.

A Friend to the Blind.

Golden Days.]

Last spring one of the old birds in Dr. Prime's collection—a gray sparrow—became blind. Straightway a little dark brown and white bird, known as a Japanese nun, and named Dick, became the sparrow's friend. The sparrow's home had a round hole as a doorway. Little Dick would sit on a perch opposite the hole and chirp. The blind bird would come out, and, guided by Dick's chirps, would leap to the perch, and so on to the seed cup and water bottle. But the most curious part of the performance was when the blind sparrow would try to get back into the house. Dick would place the sparrow exactly opposite the hole by shoving him along the perch. When opposite, Dick would chirp, and the blind bird would leap in, never failing.

A Remarkable Case.

Providence News.]

A farmer was sawing wood when it occurred to him that he ought to have the help of one or more of his fine boys. Lifting up his voice he called, but not a boy appeared. At dinner, of course, all appeared, and it was not necessary to call them. "Where were you all about two hours ago when I wanted you and shouted for you?" "I was in the shop settin' the saw," said one. "I was in the barn settin' a hen," said the second. "I was in gram'ma's room settin' the clock," said the third. "I was in the garret settin' the trap," said the fourth. "You are a remarkable set," remarked the farmer. "And where were you?" he continued, turning to the youngest. "I was on the doorstep settin' still."

The Lost Rivers of Idaho.

From the Golden Days.]

One of the most singular features in the scenery of the Territory of Idaho is the occurrence of dark, rocky chasms, into which creeks and large streams suddenly disappear and are never more seen.

The fissures are old lava channels produced by the outside of the mass cooling and forming a tube, which, when the fiery stream was exhausted, has been left empty, while the roof of the lava duct, having at some point fallen in, presents there the opening into which the river plunges and is lost.

At one place along the Snake one of these rivers appears gushing from a cleft high up in basaltic walls, where it leaps a cataract into the torrent below. Where this stream has its origin, or at what point it is swallowed up, is absolutely unknown, although it is believed that its sources are a long way up in the North country.

MINING SHARPS.

Troubles of New York Assayers With Ye Honest Miner.

New York Sun.]

"Some big liars come into an assayer's office once in a while," a downtown assayer said incidentally in a talk about mining property, "but I think the two biggest liars I have ever seen came into my office last summer, not together, thank goodness, for if they had I would have kicked them out for supposing that I might have been an eternal fool. Instead, I listened to each and gave them a piece of my mind. The first was about 45 years of age, sharp-featured, long-haired and with the appearance of a Western miner. He carelessly unwrapped a newspaper from a lump of silver ore, and asked in a business-like way to have it assayed. I picked up the lump and said off hand: 'There's no need of having that assayed. It's seventy-five per cent. silver at first glance.' And it was. It was about as rich a specimen as I had seen in some time. It was worth at least $18,000 a ton.

"'But I want it assayed,' he said. 'I've got a drift of ore like that six feet wide, and I want to sell it. I don't want to lie about it, and I want to know just what it is worth.'

"'That's my business, and, of course, I knocked off a piece of the lump. I charged him more than I would anybody else, because I knew he intended to swindle somebody. I ground the pieces of ore into dust, and put it in a bottle. Then I took a little and assayed it. It turned out just what I thought it would. As usual I made a record of the assay, and waited for the man to return.

"About four days after the assay four or five respectable old gentlemen came into the office together, and one of them unwrapped a piece of ore, and said: 'Will you please assay this for us? We are thinking of buying a silver mine, and this is some of the ore. What do you think it is worth?'

"I looked at it closely and discovered that it was from the lump my Western man had brought in.

"'Excuse me, but I have assayed this ore within five days,' I said.

"'Y-e-s,' the spokesman of the party said, hesitatingly. 'We understand that it has been assayed, but we thought it would be safer to have it assayed for us particularly. How much did you make it out to be worth?'

"'Twelve or fifteen thousand dollars a ton,' I said, not wishing to be too particular at first. 'I'll see.'

"While I was looking over my record book I noticed the gentlemen looking knowingly at one another.

"'It was $18,000,' I remarked, turning toward them. It didn't startle them a bit.

"'That's pretty rich, isn't it?'

"'Decidedly so. Where's the mine?' I asked.

"'In Colorado. We have a drift there six feet wide.'

"'Colorado! I exclaimed. 'That ore never has seen Colorado. That's from some Mexican mine.'

"'I know what I was talking about when I said that, because I can pick out Colorado ore from 2000 specimens. I can pick out ore from the Comstock lode anywhere you put it. After getting a few more particulars about the man who wanted to sell the mine, I said: 'Gentlemen, I don't want to have you taken in by anybody, and especially by one of those Western mining sharps. Instead of taking my word for this assay, go to somebody else, and I've no doubt you'll find many who will be as honest with you as I intend to be, and have your ore assayed. Take some of this dust with you and see if it be like your ore.'

"'But we can buy this mine for only $30,000,' the first speaker said.

"'If you can find a mine where the ore is all like that,' I said, 'I'll find men who will give you $50,000 for it. That isn't a true specimen, and besides, it isn't from Colorado. It's a rich find from some old mine in Mexico.'

"They looked rather glum and went out. I really pitied them. The next day the Western man came in to see me. I gave it to him hot. 'Look here,' I said, 'we've had just about enough of such fellows as you are around here. When you come in to sell a mine don't try to palm off Mexican ore for Colorado ore. Take my advice, and don't show that lump to any miner, because he'll know it in a minute. Now shin.'

"I have never seen the old gentlemen since. I guess they found somebody who told them the truth as I did.

"The other chap was a short, dumpy fellow. He wanted to have everything very secret. He had a piece of ore that I knew was Mexican, and after a long time before I could get anything out of him. At length he said: 'I'm a commercial traveler, and while I was in Mexico this summer I struck an old trail over the mountains that, I thought, would take me by a short cut to where I wanted to go. I took it, but it was the roughest ground I ever struck. About noon I was almost overcome, and dropped off my mule near a shady place to catch a nap and rest. My mule that was wandering about awoke me after a while by nearly stepping on me. In pulling my blanket off the lump that had served as a pillow, I noticed that the rock sparkled. It struck me all at once that it was silver, and I looked around to see if there were any other rocks like this in it. I don't know whether you'll believe it, but a short distance off the trail the ground was covered with them. I picked up about twenty pounds and packed them on my mule and started for the nearest settlement. I didn't say anything to anybody in that neighborhood, and I didn't dare to have the ore assayed until I got to El Paso. But I inquired about the price of land, and found I could buy that piece of ground for about $15,000. I've came on here to raise that and then start a mine. What do you think the ore is worth?'

"I took the fellow all in and said: 'Did you pick this off the ground?'

"'Certainly,' he replied.

"'Was it in this condition?'

"'Of course,' he answered, although he was beginning to be frightened.

"'Then you are the biggest liar I have ever seen,' I said very decidedly.

"The fellow winced, and I continued: 'You don't know anything about ore, and you don't know anything about Mexican land. This ore came from some mine more than twenty feet under ground, and it isn't necessary to buy Mexican land before starting a mine. You tell your story well, but you'll have hard work to find anybody who will give you $15,000 to pay for Mexican land. Get out.'

"There's a great difference, you know, in the appearance of ore that has lain on the surface any length of time and that of ore just dug from under ground. The latter is more crystallized for one particular. The surface pickings are what we call the results of a blow-out. Two drifts, coming together peak-shaped, are gradually projected out by the washing away of the earth. Water gets into the crevices, and, after a while, the peak breaks into pieces, which are scattered over the surface. If that chap had had surface ore he might have been believed, except that part about the land, which was way off."

Why Germans Emigrate.

London Truth.]

A few weeks ago three men in one of the reserve corps of the German army objected to being transported from "their village" to the depot in a cattle truck, and they innocently telegraphed a complaint to the Kaiser. For this offense they have now been tried by a court martial, and one has been sentenced to nearly eight years' hard labor in a house of correction, while the others are each to undergo seven years' confinement in a fortress. They are all married men with families, and their characters are unexceptionable. When one hears of such Draconian severity, can it be wondered that Germans are emigrating in hundreds of thousands from their down-trodden "fatherland?"

How He Measured It.

Burdette.]

"Some people," said Mrs. Sharpmale, "measure love by gold; I measure it by its quality." "I measure it by the quantity," said meek little Mr. Sharpmale in feeble tones; "I measure it by the peck." "By the peck, you lunatic; what do you mean by that?" "By the hen-peck," he gurgled hoarsely, and then all the rest of the night he wished he hadn't said it.

OUR NEW YORK LETTER.

Emma Nevada, the Songbird of the Century.

VICTORIA MOROSINI'S HANDSOME HUBBY.

Heroism of a Street Arab—An Old Methodist Church—A Case of Confederal Clerk.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

NEW YORK, Dec. 10.—The advent of a new singer, and one who is flesh of our flesh and bone of our bone, is a matter of sufficient importance to demand something more than a passing notice. If we measure worth by the rewards that it commands, no talent of brain or muscle can compare with the voice of a first-class singer. For the past two seasons we have imported what seems like a foreign exotic, but what is really a native product, at a cost of $5000 per night. Her serene highness, Patti, sings four times a week and adds $80,000 to her bank account every month, and she has so managed things between here and Europe, that she can do this if she pleases fifty weeks in the year. This represents a million of dollars, which, at the present rate of interest, represents thirty-three millions of dollars—so she actually draws the interest on that sum—her voice representing that much capital. But in the new star, Emma Nevada, Patti has a rival whom she may well fear; young, talented, enthusiastic in her profession, with no boy sinister to prevent her social recognition, she comes to us in the early morning of her professional life. Twenty years ago, in the wild mountain range which divides Nevada from Utah, a little inviting hamlet nestled among the hills. The present city of Austin was then but an assemblage of rude huts, for building materials were scarce and living was very high. In a neat but plain little house lived the father of the present prima donna—the principal physician of the place. Who could have dreamt in the midst of such rude surroundings, that from this place would go forth before whose superior talent all other artists should pale, till she stands the acknowledged rival of the greatest singer of these latter days, Patti? Those who have watched the European papers for the past year have noticed occasionally reference to the new American soprano, Emma Nevada, and her advent in New York was most anxiously looked for by the musical public. It was a daring feat to bring her out in the same theater and with the same company that had supported the $5,000 goddess of song, Patti. There is not one in a million but would have been irretrievably ruined by the comparison, but this young girl, almost fresh from the teacher's hands, yet blest with that supreme gift which the Almighty vouchsafes to but one in a hundred million, almost unheralded came among us, and now she has the town at her feet. What is that divine power of voice which so completely and thoroughly enslaves the ear? Whatever it is that this young artiste girl possesses it is beyond any other human being that I have ever heard. In most artists you can see the effort to gain admiration and applause, but Emma Nevada sings as the birds sing. There seems to be no appreciable sense of her surroundings or support. She would sing just as well if she were alone as she stood before a million of crowned heads. She made her first appearance last week. It was the height of the Patti season. Scalchi on the modern lyric stage, was content to play second to Patti. Miss Nevada made her first appearance in an opera familiar to any opera-goer for the past three generations—Sonnambula. New York had seen Alboni, Gerster, Albani, Nilsson, Patti, and many others, but never has there been a more pronounced and gratifying success than that won last week by this young American girl. It is gratifying in more senses than one. If music is the educator and humanizer that its admirers claim it is, we may reasonably look forward to the time when good music may be had within reach of the common people. Heretofore it has been a luxury only to be indulged in by the rich; but the advent of this new song-bird opens tremendous possibilities for the future. Her opening opera, while one of the severest tests from an artistic point of view, as an introduction for this divine young song-bird, no part could have been more happily chosen. Her support was not all that could have been desired. The "Elvino," instead of looking like a romantic young lover worthy of such a bride, looked more like a butcher or a brewer; how any respectable young girl could have fallen in love with him was a mystery. But the superior talent of the debutante bore down every obstacle and swept them from her path as the hurricane sweeps the dust and the chaff from its course. While she was on the stage you lost sight of the theater and its surroundings, content to listen to the divine melody she poured forth, and as she closed with the magnificent air which ends the opera of Sonnambula, the whole house rose as a single man and the wild hurzas and bravos that shook the Academy to its foundation proclaimed one of the grandest operatic triumphs of the century.

A MUSICAL MIRACLE,

THE MOST SUPERB CONTRALTO

We congratulate Miss Nevada on the splendid victory she has achieved, and her social recognition by the very best families is a just tribute to this young American girl who brings back to her native land her transcendant talent and character as spotless as the winter's snow upon the mountains of her native State.

VICTORIA MOROSINI.

While on the subject of music, let me dispel a wide-spread delusion and one which has received undeserved currency from a mendacious press. Miss Morosini is not homely, but on the contrary, exceedingly pretty. She is just the kind of a girl that any coachman would have run away with if he could; and, on the other hand Hulsekamp is not the lout that the press have painted him, but as good-looking a young fellow as you would meet in a day's walk; he is just such a coachman as any young girl who had been twenty-seven years without a beau would be likely to get up and dust with. The other night, when Mrs. Morosini-Hulsekamp sang in Brother Talmage's church in Brooklyn the audience was largely composed of ladies, and when the young husband led his newly-made wife on the stage there was a general Oh I-I-I by everybody, and all around me I could hear such remarks as this: "Ain't he handsome!" "Oh, what a nice mustache," "He is just as nice as a pink," "Isn't he sweet!" and a dangerous-looking widow remarked to her next neighbor, "I wouldn't mind running away with him myself." Remarks equally complimentary were heard about the lady, and a fat stockbroker remarked to his friend, "By Jingo, Jim, I wish I was a coachman; she is not only good-looking but she looks and acts like a lady, and she sings, if not like Patti, at least good enough for a dollar concert."

A STREET ARAB'S HEROISM.

Among the permanent improvements which demand especial mention is the building going up on the site of the World office. Few such shocking calamities as the destruction of the World office has occurred in New York. The building caught fire about 10 o'clock in the morning, the street was filled with thousands of people—and hundreds were employed in the building itself—when the alarm was given, the people upstairs were quite unconscious of their danger. The inside of the building was a shell. It was filled from bottom to top with all kinds of inflammable material, the stairs caught fire and all communication with the upper stories was cut off, and there, in broad daylight, thousands of people stood to see a number of their fellow creatures perish miserably before their eyes—they having no appliance to reach them. While three persons in the upper story saw the flames mounting up to them and no human aid near, death seeming inevitable, a street arab climbed a telegraph pole, cut the wire, swung it over against the burning building and on it they all escaped.

A building is now being erected on this memorable site which will be able to defy the elements, nothing short of an earthquake will ever bring it down. It is as fire-proof as the art of man can make it; it is all built of iron and brick and is so arranged that the next room might be on fire and his neighbor hardly know it. The first two stories are of iron and the several stories above are of brick; when finished it will be an ornament to the city. The other end of the little block on which it stands is occupied by the New York Times, and the entire plot, forty years ago, was the site of Dr. Spring's church, one of the most fashionable and wealthy in the city.

AN OLD METHODIST CHURCH.

Speaking of churches, it is refreshing to find one house dedicated to Christian worship that mammon has not shaken. The old Methodist church on John street has passed its hundredth year. Here the early founders of Methodism first dispensed the bread of life under a Christian roof. Up to the time of the erection of this church, they had found their congregation on the highways and in the fields, but here it first found a local habitation and a home. Other churches which were great and strong when it was a struggling infant, have disappeared and been forgotten—the busy war of business is all around it—the people have all gone away from the ward in which it stands, it being the least populous in the city. On a Sabbath day the streets in that part of the town are lifeless and dead for the people who once lived in these houses have gone uptown; but the old church stands there still, very small, and not a particle aristocratic, it is true, but clean and respectable nevertheless, where you can hear the gospel as Wesley preached it—plain and true, with no stained glass windows, nor gewgaw surroundings, but where the gospel of Christ is all in all.

POINTS.

But business is making great inroads—it is gradually but surely sweeping away the rookeries of the Five Points, and in a few years they will only live in the unpleasant memories of the past.

As we approach the first of January, we all look forward to one of the most radical changes that has ever taken place in our city government.

For the first time in our history the Mayor is clothed with despotic power; he can appoint who he pleases without the interference of the Aldermen. This is indeed a blessing, for no matter how bad the Mayor may be he can never be as bad or as corrupt as the Aldermen.

The week has been somewhat eventful. We have had another case of confidential clerk. A large firm on the Sixth avenue had a nice young man, who on a salary of $1,500, kept a coupe, lived in a fine house, sported his handsome figure at watering places, frequented the opera took in Irving and Terry, Fanny Davenport, the Opera Bouffe, Monte Cristo, and all the other sights and things. At last his sapient employers got it through their heads that these things cost money, and on overhauling his accounts a deficiency was found of several thousand dollars; the consequence was that the fascinating young masher is arrested for forgery with a fair prospect of States prison for the next ten years.

Irving can't act Hamlet. It is very funny, very unique, very picturesque, but not Shakespeare. Ellen Terry is all right, but we can't go Irving's Hamlet.

Three elopements, fellows ran away with other fellow's wives, and now the other fellows are afraid that they will bring them back.

They have bagged the thieves who broke into the Kings county penitentiary, and now these chaps who were so anxious to break in will have a chance to find out how pleasant it will be to reside there for the next ten years. Warden Green will make it warm for them, and I think it will be some time before any burglars will break into the penitentiary again.

Stocks have taken a little jump; none of the big operators are in; they are all fighting shy of the market.

The flight of Mother Mandlebaum, the notorious fence and patron of thieves generally, after a twenty-four hour wonder, she is hailed with delight by all honest people. We are not particular who gets her, so we have got rid of her.

Five terrible suicides cloud the week, but they sink out of sight and the tide of the great city rolls on. The streets are crowded with the best dressed people to be found in any city in the world. The theaters are doing a rushing business. The fine weather has brought the sale of winter goods to a stand still.

The conference of the Republicans this week at the Fifth Avenue Hotel has not settled the Senatorship. No one has the inside track as yet. Some now in expectancy will realize before the Ides of March "That many are called, but few are chosen."

BROADBRIM.

The Mouse's Blanket.

[Prof. F. A. Fuley in Longman's Magazine.]

Very many years ago, when I was living as a boy in a country vicarage in Yorkshire, I heard my mother say that a bank-note which she had laid on a shelf in a storeroom, always kept locked by herself, had suddenly vanished. Our servants were quite above suspicion, and, on the other hand, the facts that the note had been laid in that particular place and had disappeared admitted of no doubt whatever.

After some search in the storeroom, and the removal of the most of the things in it, it was noticed that there was a mouse-hole in the corner of the floor. A happy thought suggested itself, that this should be explored. Accordingly a carpenter was sent for, and I have a very vivid recollection of standing by while a board was taken up and the man's arm extended underneath it up to the shoulder. Immense quantities—I remember two large jars being quite filled—of minute bits of paper were drawn out, the accumulation, probably, of very many years. Strange to say, in one corner of the heap he got hold of a nest of young mice, and brought them out lying on the bank-note! It was wholly uninjured, except a slight stain. Not the smallest portion had been nibbled away, and it was absolutely the only piece of paper left entire in all that heap.

It happened, then, that the mouse had carried the note, folded up as it was, through its hole, and then unfolded and spread it out as a lining to its nest, and had used it as a blanket, evidently conscious of its softness and flexibility. The really wonderful part of the story is the leaving of this one piece of paper entire, apparently because it was of a different texture from the rest.

The Agony in Store.

[From the Chicago News.]

The 5-year-old son of a family the other day stood watching his baby brother, who was making a great noise over having his face washed. The little fellow at length exclaimed to the baby: "You think you have lots of trouble, but you don't know anything about it. Wait till you are big enough to get a lickin', and then you'll see; won't he mamma?"

Mother's Room.

I'm awfully sorry for poor Jack Roe;
He's the boy that lives with his aunt, you know,
And he says his house is filled with gloom
Because it has got no "mother's room."
I tell you what, it is fine enough
To talk of "mendolow" and such fancy stuff,
But the room of rooms that seems best to me,
The room where I'd always rather be,
Is mother's room, where a fellow can rest,
And talk of the things his heart loves best.

What if I do get dirt about,
And sometimes startle my aunt with a shout;
It is mother's room, and if she don't mind,
To the hints of others I'm always blind.
Maybe I lose my things—what then?
I'm pardoned soon I find them again.
And I've never denied that I litter the floor,
With marbles and tops and many things more,
But I tell you for boys with a tired head,
It is jolly to rest on mother's bed.

Now poor Jack Roe, when he visits us,
I take him to mother's room, you see,
Because it's the nicest place to go
When a fellow's spirits are getting low,
And mother she's always kind and sweet,
And there's always a smile poor Jack to greet,
And somehow the sunbeams seem to glow
More brightly in mother's room, I know,
Than anywhere else, and you'll never find gloom
Or any old shadow in mother's room.

Susan Sunshine's House and Home Papers.

I do believe that there is such a thing as an immortal youth—for the heart at least—a freshness that never need fade, and a beauty that need not wither. Cheerfulness is a sort of Spring sunshine; it has all its vitalizing power, and it keeps the soul young, and frightens away the ghosts of imaginary ills. It is better than any cosmetic, and as a preventive of wrinkles it is the most invaluable recipe that I know of. I have seen women who were perpetually borrowing trouble, whose thoughts could never lift themselves above the little earthly perplexities of their domestic duties, and their life's prime they looked so old, faded and spiritless that it was hard to believe that they were not their own grandmothers. But I have found such women mostly in the midst of unpleasant surroundings, in homes that were bare of beauty, homes that were in some manner the outer expression of their inner lives, simply places of shelter, dreary centers of drudgery and toil, with no uplifting into a higher life, no whispers of beauty, no sunlight of hope, and wasting of aspiration in the dull apathetic atmosphere. What a place for children to be born into! What a place for soul blight and mildew, and for the paralysis of age to enter and darken even life's noon!

If you would have a child's life pure, hating all that is foul and offensive, see to it that its physical as well as its moral senses are educated. Do not try to cultivate in my children a love of sweet scents and to so train their olfactories that they shall be unwilling to endure the foul air of ill-ventilated rooms, and have as great a dislike to noxious odors as they would to dirty and ill-kept clothing. How they delight in fresh, clean linen with the scent of fragrant blossoms in every fold! It has a sense of purity about it such as is never suggested by musty-smelling garments. Some years ago I found a recipe for a fragrant-scented mixture which if properly prepared and put away in little silken bags will give to the linen laid away in drawers and closets a touch of the sweetness from spice-laden zones, or gardens full of odorous bloom. So give it to you:

Half a pound of lavender flowers, half an ounce each of dried mint and thyme, quarter of an ounce each of cloves and caraway seeds, and one of common salt. The lavender flowers, thyme and mint must be reduced to powder, the cloves and caraway bruised in a mortar, the salt dried in the oven, a drop of oil of cedar rubbed into the mixture, a few shavings of carbolic soap added, and all the ingredients thoroughly mixed together.

Give each of the children two or three of these bags filled with this delicate fragrance, and let them place them among their clothing, and you give to these sweet human blossoms an added charm, and their clothing will suggest no less of purity and perfumed delight than does a garland of heliotrope and roses.

Here is a dish that would dispel the frowns from the face, and coax into good nature the most irate of Benedicts. It is as dear to his inner self as full cream and benedictine, or a triumphant election to office would be to his soul:

Beat to a froth the whites of six eggs, which have been seasoned as for an omelette, and pour into a buttered baking tin; pour across it, at equal distances, six spoonsfuls of cream, into each of which drop the yolks whole; bake, but not too briskly, and serve hot.

The Christmas time is just at hand when all that is best in human nature comes to the surface, and expresses itself in gifts and kindly greetings and a more general thoughtfulness for the good of others. It is the one day when we step out most largely from selfishness, and when even the least generous natures find pleasure in ministering to others. How infinite must be that nature that sheds its gracious influences through the centuries, how divine the "Word made manifest in the flesh," whose love so lightens the ages and sheds its sacred beams upon the hearts of men. What would the world be without its Christ and without its Christmas?

Among the pretty gifts that the little folks may make for "mamma" or for friends are the table mats, now so fashionable for high teas. They are made of fine green macreme cord and crocheted in the form of a beech or elm leaf. A bow of narrow dark green ribbon is placed on the stem. They are very pretty.

Another simple gift for Christmas is the dainty lamp-shade crocheted out of deep pink cotton and covered with Tarchon lace. They are easily made and the effect is pleasing.

A more expensive and elaborate gift is the velvet piano cover. These are becoming very fashionable, and are made full size of crimson, old gold, dark blue and bottle green, and are heavily embroidered in gold.

A handsome cover for a sofa-pillow is made by embroidering two strips of blue satin with pink rosebuds and some fine green foliage; alternate these strips with velvet or plush of a contrasting color; a dark crimson is particularly pretty with the blue.

Very pretty baskets are made of the seine twine; you can hardly think how pretty they are until you see one. Both work baskets and large ones for waste paper are crocheted of the cord; they are round and may be of shell stitch or the common plain close crocheted work. On the bottom a projecting rim must be crocheted, so that the basket will have a firm foundation. After it is finished with a scallop, melt some white glue, dip the basket into it, and shape it over a mold or jar of the proper size and shape. A basket made in this way is very ornamental if two rows of open-work spaces are left in the middle, through which bright ribbons may be run. A bow where they join is a pretty addition. Line the basket with silk or satin if you wish it to be very handsome, or with silesia if for ordinary use.

OUR BOYS AND GIRLS.

A Poem On How the Leaves Came Down.

WINTER AMUSEMENTS IN SNOWLAND

Fun On an Ice Ship—Dramming the Children Up to Go to School—The Aleuts and Their Church.

How the Leaves Came Down.

I'll tell you how the leaves came down,
The great Tree to his children said:
"You're getting sleepy, Yellow and Brown,
Yes, very sleepy, little Red;
It is quite time you went to bed."

"Ah!" begged each silly, pouting leaf;
"Let us a little longer stay;
Dear Father Tree, behold our grief.
'Tis such a pleasant day
We do not want to go away."

So just for one more merry day
To the great tree the leaflets clung,
Frolicked and danced and had their way,
Upon the autumn breezes swung,
Whispering all their sports among:

"Perhaps the great tree will forget,
And let us stay until the spring
If we all beg and coax and fret.
But the great Tree did no such thing;
His mantled ice he bear the whispering.

"Come, children, all to bed," he cried;
And ere the leaves could wipe their prayer
He shook his head, and far and wide,
Fluttering and rustling everywhere,
Down sped the leaflets through the air.

I saw them; on the ground they lay,
Golden and red, a huddled swarm,
Waiting till one from far away,
In soft white clothes heaped upon her arm,
Should come to wrap them safe and warm.

The great, bare Tree looked down and smiled.
"Good night, dear little leaves," he said;
And from below each sleepy child
Replied "Good-night," and murmured,
"It is so nice to go to bed.

More About Snowland — Winter Sports of the Aleuts—Ice-ships.

I told you last week of the long summer days at Saint Paul's Island, when there was scarcely any darkness, nothing more than a few hours of semi twilight. Now I will tell you of the short winter days and long nights, which I can assure you were not so pleasant. How should you like to live where the sun did not get up till the middle of the forenoon, and then just crept along lazily a little ways above the low hills, and then slipped out of sight again in the middle of the afternoon? There were no bright, clear sunbeams streaming from the zenith overhead, but only cold yellow rays of sunshine from a sun that hung so low the short stunted bushes cast their shadows behind them at noon, and the day looked as if it were ready to go to sleep. The sunrises in that region is a season of terrible storms. Every few days we had what the natives called a poorgah. That is what we should call a norther. The wind comes sweeping right down from the pole, and is usually accompanied by a heavy fall of snow. Fifteen minutes after one of these storms has commenced I have seen the snow piled up in great drifts nearly to the top of our windows, making the room so dark we had to light our lamps, while the wind shook the house like an earthquake and roared like thunder. I used to wonder when the storms raged so fearfully on these islands what was going on at the pole, that the winds howl way more fiercely or blustier more terribly away up in that world of frozen midnight than they did in our inland-world where we were walled in by icy seas and shaken by tempests? I wonder if we shall ever know anything more of those polar regions than we know now—shall ever learn if those polar storms begin, or whether there is anything but ice about the north pole. But this I am sure of—if it is any drearier or more desolate than were these islands on these tempestuous winter days, I should not want to go there, even if I could have the honor of discovering the pole myself. But sometimes, even in this world-wide desolation, fun could be had which every one of my readers would have enjoyed. There were some small inland lakes or ponds on this island, one of which was immediately in front of the native village where we lived. In the winter it was frozen solid, and the smooth ice was delightful for skaters. But there was something better to be enjoyed here than skating even, fine sport as that is.

The American gentlemen on the island fitted up an ice ship in which we could sail on the ice as a ship does on the water. They took a large whale boat, and fastened some great sails to it. Then they had a helm with which to guide it, and a rudder so that it could be turned in any direction set to work to teach the natives. After the United States had acquired these islands they were leased to the Alaska Commercial Company, which has its headquarters at San Francisco. When they saw how these poor natives lived, they sent to the islands ship loads of timber, and everything necessary for the building of houses. They also sent up carpenters, who built frame houses for all the native families whom they employed to kill seals. They sent them food and clothing, and now their ships go up every year laden with everything that these people need to eat and wear. They pay the natives good wages for their work, and they have all the money that they need to supply their simple wants. All the grown people on the islands now are members of the Greek church. They have built a handsome church building which cost fourteen thousand dollars, all of which they paid themselves. It is built in the form of a Greek cross. It has several round-roofed towers like those which you see in pictures in your geography of Turkish mosques. In the principal tower is a musical chime of bells, and on the central tower is a church clock which strikes the hours, and its echoes go sounding out over the waters of the Behring Sea. The northern summer sun shines on the face of this clock long after the starry night-time has closed about us in these more southern lands. Long before you reach the island this white church building, standing far up upon a pretty hillside may be seen, and at sunset its gilt cross gleams from its highest spire like a golden finger in the sky. Within the church is a beautiful altar and the holy place for the priest behind it. It has a great chandelier which looks like silver, which holds an immense number of candles. The candlesticks about the altar are silver-plated, and the censer which holds the incense which the priest burns before the congregation is also of the same material. There are a good many fine pictures upon the walls of the Virgin and the Saints. There is a nice carpet where the priest and his assistants stand, but the floor in the rest of the church is bare. We used sometimes to go from the Government House to church; then the natives would lay a carpet on the floor and bring in chairs for us to sit. But the rest of the people all stood—mothers with little babies in their arms, and sometimes with older children too. Sometimes when the children went to sleep their mothers would lay them down upon the floor. If they wakened and cried then the mothers would sit down on the floor, and rock them back and forth in their arms until they were quiet. I've sometimes seen eight or ten mothers sitting on the church floor in that way. It was a cold place to sit, for even on the coldest days there was no fire in the church, and the doors were not always shut. I am afraid we should find excuses for staying at home from church very often if we had to worship all through the winter in a church where the walls glistened with frost, and long icicles hung from the roof. But these people never stay at home from service, and at Christmas time their church is all ablaze with candles and filled with the smoke of incense and the sound of music. Next week I may tell you of the way they keep Christmas. E. A. O.

The "Red Sunsets" of 1884.

[From the New York Herald.]

The red sunsets which were so conspicuous a year ago have excited this autumn great attention in both hemispheres. The various theories propounded to account for the phenomenon, especially that which attributed the sky glows to vast clouds of volcanic dust discharged at the eruption of Krakatoa in August, 1883, seem to have lost ground, and some new hypothesis is needed to clear up the mystery. The English astronomer, Mr. Backhouse, reports in Nature his observations of a red corona round the sun, which, he says, "is still plainly visible in England." "It has been habitual," he adds, "for me to scan the neighborhood of the sun for halos during twenty-five years, and I never observed it previous to the date mentioned"—November, 1883.

The reddish halo to which Mr. Backhouse has called attention has been this fall noticed by several observers. An English scientist, Mr. E. Douglas Archibald, visiting the summit of Mt. Washington on the 5th of September, at sunrise, noted "in addition to the usual sunrise effects, a large circle of rosy purple haze situated about fifteen degrees above the horizon, and apparently having no connection with the yellow and red horizontal bands beneath it." Though this observer had witnessed the sun rising from various altitudes up to twelve thousand feet, he had never seen anything so curious as the sunrise on Mt. Washington. His suggestion is that the rosy mist may be the last become so conspicuous because, while the sunrise and sunset glows have exhibited a marked decline in duration and brilliancy since 1883, the halo has undergone no similar diminution of intensity, and thus attracts more attention relatively than it did at first. This explanation of the recent glows appears to be satisfactory as far as it goes; but astronomers will have to explain why, if the phenomenon is due to terrestrial dust floating in the upper atmosphere, it has been so rarely recorded in the history of their science.

The Irish Widow Relates Her Experience With Roller Skates.

The Garden of Eden.

[From the Troy Times.]

The reputed site of the Garden of Eden at the junction of the Tigris and Euphrates, is now a sterile tract, where the only vegetable life consists of a clump of date trees near a very small and dirty village, called Gurna, at which the Turks maintain a garrison and telegraph office. The inhabitants point out to strangers the tree of knowledge—a most sickly specimen, bearing a small green berry which would cause even a goat to turn away in disgust.

USEFUL HINTS FOR FARM AND STOCK.

Sulphur for Orange Trees—Profit from Swine—How to Feed Cows—Line on Stock.

Sulphur for Orange Trees.

All analytical chemists are agreed that sulphur enters into and forms a constituent of the fruit of the citrus trees. From that fact the conclusion must arise that sulphur should in some form and manner be applied to the soil, unless it be already one of its component parts. For this purpose sulphur flour may be used, or sulphuric acid, diluted with ten or more times its bulk of water, may be used with advantage, but great care must be taken in such use to avoid its coming in contact with the person or clothes, as it will burn them, even with such dilution. The sulphates of lime, magnesia, potash, soda, iron, and ammonia can be readily handled and generally are cheap when purchased in large quantities. The sulphate of lime (gypsum) is cheapest, and sulphates of potash and ammonia are the best fertilizers. All are of high grade as fertilizers upon sandy lands, such as are the orange soils of Florida. The action of plant life with water and sunlight decomposes all the forms of sulphur and a union with ammonia takes place in the soil, hence arises most of its value as a fertilizer.

All sulphur applications are destructive of fungoidal growth, and microscopic animalculæ; and hence sulphuric acid sufficiently diluted with water that it will not attack the bark and leaves of the tree, will destroy all fungus growth upon them, and at the same time kill many insects that feed upon the juices and fiber of the tree. The fumes of sulphur will have a similar effect, but is not so efficiently or effectually applied. These fungoidal growths may readily be detected upon the limbs and bodies of those trees on which the scales have been in excess. The mal de goma, gum disease, which attacks the trees in both body and root, causing dead spots on them, and when the roots are attacked causing them to die, if not caused by a fungus, is given rise to fungoidals that grow upon the live wood and destroy it. These are destroyed by sulphur or sulphuric acid.

Profit from Swine.

The New England Farmer says: "The best feeders in New England long ago learned that the most profit from swine feeding is made when the pig is converted into a hog in the shortest possible space of time. To do this good breeds are selected, the pigs are fed well from the start, and they are kept growing continuously from birth till the time when they will sell at the best profit; formerly at about a year old, but more recently at from eight to nine or ten months. Such feeders now make two crops of pork in a year, instead of one as formerly. This requires a good deal of care in the breeding and rearing of small pigs—warm pens for the breeding stock, and generous feeding all the time. Pigs treated in this way are always plump, smooth and thrifty."

Oatmeal for Cows.

Of the use of oatmeal for cows, says a dairy writer, mention is not often made in this country, but when spoken of it is always with praise. That it is better than corn meal, there can be no doubt; it is richer in both albuminoids and fat, and the usefulness of those two nutriments, and especially the former, for making milk, is shown by the many results of numerous careful experiments, but by the acknowledged usefulness of oilcake meal. When this meal is used freely there would be less use for oatmeal, but under some circumstances it might be advantageously substituted for the new bran in the favorite mixture for cows of Indian meal and corn.

Cribbed Corn.

If the corn is thoroughly dry before being cribbed it may be put up in very large quantities, but if it is not dry then the crib ought to be narrow and open. There is no need of having an open crib take rain. Let the siding be of four inch boards, with two corners diagonally opposite, chambered off at right angles. Put the boards on horizontally, one-half inch apart, and never edge of the board should extend down as low as the upper inner edge of the next board below, although the boards are half an inch apart. This method, says says the Kansas Farmer, prevents rain from getting into the crib. The beveled edges of the boards overlap, and yet do not touch, while at the same time it affords plenty of ventilation.

Lice on Stock.

Carey Smith, in the Iowa Homestead, says that after trying nearly all the "sure cures" for lice on stock, he has gone back to the tobacco remedies. Tobacco can be bought cheap, and stems can be got from the cigarmakers for nothing. Steep until you have a strong decoction, and apply to every part. Apply the second or third time. To exterminate the lice one must not only kill all the lice on the stock but burn all the bedding, fumigate or whitewash all stables and sheds, being careful to have the whitewash penetrate every crack and corner. If once rid of them, examine every new animal brought on the place, and, if necessary, doctor immediately.

To Preserve Eggs.

Eggs will soon be more plentiful, and their preservation for winter use will be in order. There are many ways of doing this, but the one here given seems to be preferable to most of them. Miss Rose Hubbard, who took the second prize at the Birmingham, England, show, gave her process as follows: Melt one part of white wax to two parts of spermaceti, boil and mix thoroughly; or two parts clarified suet to one of wax and two of spermaceti. Take new laid eggs, rub with antiseptic salt or fine rice starch. Wrap each egg in fine tissue paper, putting the broad end downward, screw the paper tightly at the top, leaving an inch to hold it by. Dip each egg rapidly into the fat heated to 100 degrees; withdraw and leave to cool; pack broad end downward in dry white sand or sawdust.

Manuring.

So far as possible manures should be applied at least a year before the land is to be plowed. Sod land well top-dressed now or any time this fall will have its fertility thoroughly distributed through the soil by winter rains, and will be in excellent condition to plow for corn or potatoes next spring. The manure applied now will do twice as much good as that put on just before the land is to be plowed.

A Valuable Lesson.

Mr. Jonathan Tallcott gives an instructive bit of experience in the Breeders' Gazette. A three-year-old heifer was noticed a few mornings since in the pasture with a calf by her side, which was a few days sooner than we expected, and instead of going for her at once and milking her, we let her and the calf run together during the day. When they were brought in at night the calf appeared extra stout and smart; he had nearly cleared the udder of his dam of the first milk, and his first passages were all right; but the over-loading of his stomach had been done, and the result was that diarrhœa, in a very severe form, set in, and resulted in the death of the calf very soon, before we were fully aware of the danger the calf was in. Had the calf been allowed but a little milk for the first few days, no doubt all would have gone well with it. A little negligence no doubt caused his death.

Saving corn fodder.—A great deal of corn fodder is wasted yearly, because not cut and housed in time. That which is sown exclusively for the fodder is more difficult to cure than that which has grown a crop of grain. As a a rule it is greener and more succulent and really less valuable than larger corn stalks whose juices have more sugar. The fodder from a good corn crop is worth nearly as much as feed for cows as an average crop of hay. In fact, as most farmers understand, hay is not good feed for milch cows, except occasionally as a change of diet. Corn fodder in some shape must always be the staple cow feed in winter in this country.

Corn and sour apples—It is not advisable to feed uncooked sour apples to pigs that are fattening on corn. The acid in the fruit injures their teeth, making the pig's mouth sore and preventing regular feeding. The unripe corn, if fed in excess, often has the same effect, as it sours on the stomach and thus injures digestion. Apples may be fed in small quantities with meal, and if they are fed together no better fattening food need be desired.

TEMPERANCE.

Brave for the Right.

He had come to the city within the year, and entered into business with a young man named Wellington, the son of a wealthy broker, who was at that time traveling in Europe. On his return and introduction to Ralph Merrill, attracted by his fine physique and pleasing address, his cultured mind and generous heart, he invited him to his elegant home, introduced him to his daughter Edith, a fair and graceful girl, and showed a desire in various ways to be his friend.

Not long after Mr. Wellington's return from abroad, some of his intimate business friends planned to give him a banquet at Delmonico's. Everything that could give pleasure or grace to the entertainment was ordered. The guests invited were gentlemen prominent in the commercial world; young Wellington and Ralph Merrill were among them because of their relations with the honored guest of the evening. When the time appointed arrived the banquet was found to be all that could be desired. After the substantial viands were enjoyed a variety of delicious dainties were set before the guests. Just then it was that Mr. Wellington spoke to Ralph, whose seat at the table was not far removed from his own.

"Mr. Merrill, will you take wine with me?" at the same time sending to him the waiter, with the bottle of rare wine from which his own glass had just been filled. Ralph indicated to the servant that the glass beside his plate was not to be filled. Mr. Wellington saw the motion, and the quick words came:

"What, Merrill! not take wine with me? Why not, sir?"

For a moment there was no reply; for a moment the young man listened to the tempting voice within, listened while it said: "You cannot announce your temperance principles in this company. Mr. Wellington will be angry, and with his large influence, he can ruin you, financially, and Edith—you know how charming you think her. Anger her father now, and you will see her no more; refuse now to drink, and you make shipwreck of your dearest hopes. It is only for once. Yield! yield!"

But a moment, and then courage, Godlike, came to the front.

Steadily, yet modestly, his dark eyes met those of Mr. Wellington, in which an ominous, half-angry light had gathered. The attention of all the table was on the two, and in their midst was a brief silence. On that silence the young man's voice fell low and clear:

"Mr. Wellington, when I was a boy, too young to write, my mother took me to the old Methodist church in our village, and putting a pen in my hand, guided it with her own, and so signed my name to a temperance pledge. That pledge I have never broken. Shall I break it to-night?"

Over the face of Mr. Willington a wave of emotion swept. "Give me your hand, Merrill. Yes, my boy, I had rather lose all I am worth than to see you break that pledge. Far better go to your grave," were the first words his lips could frame. "Truly, truly, Merrill, you have proved yourself a hero!" were the next words, and they were spoken with misty eyes.—[The Morning and Day of Reform.

Talking with a temperance lady who is in sympathy with the advanced thought of the day, she said it would not do to trust her son with the ballot. To an expression of surprise at such a remark from her, she said women move too much on the straight lines of their intuitions. They did not believe in curves or compromises. They were like the late Emperor Nicholas, of Russia, who ordered a railroad to be built from St. Petersburg to Moscow. The engineer, an American, showed the Emperor his survey, which made quite a circuitous route between the two cities. "What do you go out around here and there for?" demanded the Emperor, pointing to the curves in the road. It was answered that the line diverged to escape certain large rivers, ravines and mountains, etc. The Emperor, took a pencil and drawing a straight line from city to city, exclaimed, "Build a road on that line." Our anti-suffragist said that this course of action might be taken by the Czar of all the Russians who undoubtedly would have a better road than the one marked out by the engineer, but the example was not a safe one to follow among the divergent views of 55,000,000 sovereigns.

Let us remember the Russian story, the route diverged to accommodate several big cities lying outside of the straight line; but the "rivers," "mountains," etc. do very well for the point which our friend desired to illustrate.

The course of Miss Willard and the national W. C. T. U. has done a great deal to drive many men from their woman suffrage views. But we do not see but what the radical and foolish action of these women is fairly offset by St. John and his

An Appeal to the Saviour of the World.

ADVICE TO HUSBANDS AND WIVES.

Japan About to Take on a New Religious Life—Items of Interest to Those Religiously Inclined.

Near the Cross.

Saviour, when in dust to Thee
Low we bow the adoring knee,
When repentant to the skies
Scarce we lift our weeping eyes,
Oh! by all Thy pains and woe
Suffered once for man below,
Bending from Thy throne on high
Hear our solemn litany.

By the sacred grief that wept
O'er the grave where Lazarus slept;
By the gracious tears that flowed
Over Salem's lost abode;
By the mournful word that told
Treachery lurked within Thy fold;
Jesus, look with pitying eyes,
Hear our solemn litany.

By thine hour of whelming fear;
By Thine agony and prayer;
By the purple robe of scorn;
By Thy wounds, Thy crown of thorn;
By Thy cross, Thy pangs, Thy cries,
By Thy perfect sacrifice,
Jesus, look with pitying eye,
Hear our solemn litany.

By Thy deep, expiring groan;
By the sealed sepulchral stone;
By Thy triumph o'er the grave;
By Thy power from death to save,
Mighty God, ascended Lord,
To Thy Throne in heaven restored,
Prince and Saviour, hear our cry,
Hear our solemn litany.

Husbands and Wives.

[Philadelphia Call.]

Husbands and wives do not know till they learn by experience (which some never do) how much can be added to the sum of their happiness by thinking twice, and indefinitely postponing when either is tempted to say a cutting thing to the other. It does not take a great while for a young couple to win the confidence each of the other, that nothing designed to wound will be said. When this confidence is established, words which otherwise would inflict pain become harmless. In a family where this confidence is secured by uniform respect for the feelings of each other, there is a degree of freedom from restraint, and of general happiness, which is impossible where it is not. Every good family is a training school, in which the husband and wife, from the nuptial day, are pupils.

He is an exceptional and rarely fortunate young man who has not some habits of deportment which mar his character and influence. It is expected of the wife that she will correct and eradicate these. Unless the husband has an incurable, coarse nature, she is justly held responsible for the polish and neatness of his manners. So much as for the purity of his lines, when he appears in church or society. And if the wife has unpleasant imperfections of manner or conduct, it always reflects upon the husband. This shows that by common consent the family is regarded as a training school in which the husband and wife, as well as the children, are learners. Such being the case, each should submit to the necessary discipline with pleasure.

Christ Our Life.

Christ is our life. "In him we live, move and have our being." When he manifested himself as the Creator, he breathed the man in his own image, breathing into him the breath of life, and man became a living soul. Our very vitality, both of mind and body, is therefore derived from and sustained by his all-pervading life. Though all mankind in this general respect depends upon divine vitality, the Christian alone is, or should be, so near to the heart of Christ as to derive that strength which will enable him to live in accordance with the divine will and that peace which passeth all understanding.

A life which is hid with Christ in God yields to one a never-failing experience of trustful repose and freedom from worldly care, but is not a life of indolence. The true Christian finds abundant opportunities for activity. It is one of the laws of our nature that spiritual vitality may be transmitted from soul to soul as well as from Christ to us. We may impart from that stock of strength which we have received from Christ to those around us who are deficient in spiritual vitality.

Japan.

[The Free Church Monthly.]

Not least among the indications that Japan is rapidly preparing to take on a new religious life, is the fact that Buddhism is girding itself for a final struggle. It was more than a match for Shintoism, an older form of religion in Japan. It came to the country in the sixth century of our era; by the ninth century of our era, having a philosophy with a better moral code than Japan had known, it became a kind of civiliser, and soon overshadowed the crude native worship that had prevailed. But it has long ago exhausted itself, and now holds on with a depraved priesthood, and lacks confidence among the people. It now sees in Christianity a powerful rival, and is astounded at its progress among the people. Something must be done. Buddhists have gone to Europe to study Christianity, with a view to attacking it more intelligently.

Busy.

No man's spirits were ever hurt by doing his duty; on the contrary, one good action, one temptation resisted and overcome, one sacrifice of desire or interest, purely for conscience's sake, will prove a cordial for the weakest low spirits, far beyond what either indulgence, or diversions, or company can do for them.

Religion cannot pass away. The burning of a little straw may hide the stars of the sky, but the stars are there and will reappear.—[Carlyle.

Advice should be like a gentle fall of snow, and not like a driving storm of hail. It should descend softly, and not be uttered hastily.—[J. Cox.

If you want to be miserable, think about yourself, about what you want, what you like, what respects people ought to pay to you, and what people think of you.—[Charles Kingsley.

There is a blessed peace in looking for nothing but our daily task and our portion of Christ's cross between this day and the appointed time when we shall fall asleep in him.—[Bishop Wilberforce.

The love of Christ is like the blue sky, into which you may see clearly, but the real vastness of which you cannot measure. It is like the sea, whose bosom you can look a little into where it is shallow, but its depths are unfathomable.—[McCheyne.

God has special care of the aged. When the grasshopper is a burden, and the windows are darkened, he will lodge there. The aged should see to it if any bridges be built that the spans are at least 150 feet, so that the sand be carried down the river, and that the city will keep on the road and finish the gap near Mission Creek, and everyone having property on the street will plant at least five trees from inside the levee to the river, and if we have no floods in two years we will not see another '84.

NEVER YET QUESTIONED:

The Absolute Purity and Wholesomeness of Royal Baking Powder.

It is a noticeable fact that in the numerous battles between the rival baking powder makers the absolute purity and wholesomeness of the Royal Baking Powder has never yet been questioned.

Hundreds of baking powders have been placed upon the market with great flourish of trumpets, and have strutted their brief hour in imaginary contention with Royal for the patronage of the public, but their impurities and imperfections were soon exposed by the chemist's skill and they speedily passed away, the victims of their own mephitic gases, or are awaiting the fate that sooner or later overtakes the fraud and the charlatan.

But the thousands of analyses, many of them by the most celebrated chemists of the world, the most searching scrutiny by scientific bodies in this country and Europe, the exhaustive tests before the juries of competitive and industrial exhibitions, and all the minute and prejudiced investigations by rivals and their chemists in the endeavor to find something upon which to base the shadow of a fault, have had but one result, to more fully determine and establish the fact that the Royal Baking Powder and all its ingredients are absolutely pure and wholesome. All reputable chemists, and all but the most ignorant makers of the low test, short weight, lime, alum, and other impure powders, long since ceased to examine the Royal Baking Powder to find anything impure and unwholesome in it.

While the Royal is proud of these unimpeachable indorsements, and highly gratified at the perfect result which it has, by the aid of the most competent chemists, the adoption of every available invention, and the expenditure of great sums of money, been able to accomplish, its greatest pleasure arises from the fact that its labors have been parallel with those great interests of the public sought in the protection of the lives and health of the people.

The gravity of the danger to the consumer from the many impure and unwholesome baking powders of the market is but faintly appreciated. The small amount of injurious substance imparted to the system at one time in the use of such powders is unnoticeable. They are therefore continued by the consumer in ignorance of the serious results sure to follow from the accumulated effects. This slow, insidious poisoning, because unapparent, is more dangerous than a larger dose at once. All the baking powders upon the market, except Royal, have been found to contain lime, alum, terra alba, or other ingredients that injuriously affect the health of the consumer.

The great advantage to the public of a baking powder like the Royal, whose purity and wholesomeness have never been questioned, and whose practical worth has stood the test of cooking for so many years, will be apparent to every consumer.

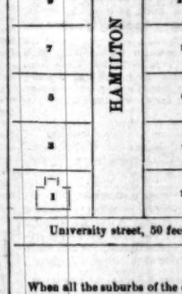
REAL ESTATE.

Homes for the People!

A NEW HOUSE, with half acre lot, worth $9500, for $5500. Who will get it?

S. M. R. R. and County Road.



When all the suburbs of the city are so desirable for residence, strangers coming here to locate find it difficult to choose between them. Most old residents, however, give the Southwesterly part the preference. There are several reasons for this, which will be seen by reading the following description of the above plat of land:

This plat is located just outside of the city limits in a south and westerly direction, and is situated three-quarters of a mile west of the University settlement, and the Agricultural Park; and is bounded on the south by the Santa Monica Railroad, on the north by University street—a 50 foot public street next to, and running parallel with Jefferson street—and on the east and west by land of other parties, being a portion of the well known Howes fruit ranch.

Hamilton street, as shown on the plat, is 40 feet wide and runs directly through the center of the lot from north to south. It will be graded at the expense of the present owner. The soil being a rich sandy loam, the location is comparatively free from dust and mud. The soil being very rich and fine is well adapted to growing all kinds of vegetables. The sweet potatoes grown here are remarkably fine, and all other kinds of vegetables do well. An abundance of pure soft water may be found from 15 to 20 feet from the surface, and at the driest time of the year the soil is moist to within one foot of the surface. Fruit trees require no irrigation. One very important reason why the southwesterly part of our suburbs is the most desirable for residence is a sanitary one. The prevailing winds coming from that direction, all noxious gases and odors from sewer cesspools or manufacturing establishments are carried from you.

This plat of land, as shown above, contains ten acres, less the streets, and is subdivided into 20 equal parts. Each lot, excepting the two fronting on the railroad, contains from 50 to 75 fine healthy fruit trees, 8 years of age, and all in full bearing. These trees were selected with the greatest care, and are of the most desirable varieties of deciduous fruits, such as apples, pears, peaches, plums, French and Hungarian prunes, etc. There are also several hundred grapevines of nearly every choice variety. Lot No. 1 has upon it a new house, just erected at a cost of $2000, containing seven rooms and bath on first floor and storage room above. Lot No. 3 has fine new hennery, with enclosed yard. The other lots have only fruit trees and vines; some, of course, more valuable than others.

The cheapest city lot offered in this neighborhood sells for $300 each. Bare land with no improvements has been sold in this immediate visinity, within three months, in 5 and 10 acre lots, at $500 per acre; and experts, who have examined this property, estimate the trees alone to be worth from $500 to $800 per acre. Each lot is sufficiently large, after erecting a dwelling house and outbuildings, to furnish fruit and vegetables for an ordinary family, and may, at any future time, be subdivided into 3 ordinary city lots, which will undoubtedly sell for $500 each within two years, at the present rate at which property is advancing in this location.

In order to give each purchaser an equal chance to obtain the most desirable lot, the property will be disposed of by subscription, and the choice of lots drawn for at the time of distribution. A uniform price of $500 will be charged for each lot, including lot No. 1 with the house, $50 to be paid upon signing the subscription paper, which amount will be deposited in bank in this city, in trust for the completion of the sale—$50 to be paid when the distribution of lots (on or before April 1, 1885) is made, and $50 semi-annually thereafter, with interest at 8 per cent. until the full amount is paid, or the whole may be paid at once, and a clear deed given.

Parties purchasing one or more of these lots who do not wish to improve at once, can lease each lot for $30 per annum for the fruit. The title to this property is perfect.

For further information and to sign subscription paper, apply daily, from 10 to 2, at 124 Second street, Hollenbeck building, at entrance to Metropolitan Dining Rooms.

How They Are to be Divided.

The lots in the O. W. Childs tract are to be divided on the homestead plan—a plan that has given universal satisfaction both in the Eastern and Western States and in Northern California. Call at the agency and read the agreement. There is nothing of the lottery in the division, every subscriber obtains full value, and the names only are drawn through their own committee for precedence in choice for lots.

The Healthiest Locality.

The healthiest locality in Los Angeles is the Childs tract. Go there and ask the families already located with their beautiful homes on Twelfth street and see the rosy-faced children of that quarter. Croakers and fault-finders are always behind the times.

Called Home.

Early yesterday morning, Mrs. Maria McAulay, wife of Contractor McAulay, died at her late residence on Georgia street. Mrs. McAulay had been ill for some time, and her death was not unlooked for by her relatives and friends. The funeral will take place this afternoon at 1:30 o'clock from the residence.

The Rainfall.

The amount of rain that fell during the recent storm beginning on the morning of the 19th was twenty-six one-hundredths of an inch. For the corresponding week in 1883, the fall was only fourteen one-hundredths of an inch.

IMPORTANT LAND SALE.

11,000 Acres of the Sausal Redondo Rancho Sold Yesterday.

Yesterday a land sale was consummated in this county which will have an important bearing on the future of this city. As is well known there is a body of very fertile land lying between Santa Monica and San Pedro, comprising the Centinela and Sausal Redondo ranchos. This tract, capable of supporting a population of several thousand, if divided into small farms, has never been opened to settlement, the owners preferring to rent it out after the fashion of the English landlords. By good management a company of Pacific Coast capitalists, the assistance of A. E. Pomeroy, of Pomeroy & Mills, have succeeded in purchasing 11,000 acres of the Sausal Redondo rancho, and in the near future will place it on the market in small tracts at a low price. The gentlemen interested in the enterprise are Judge Silent, Mr. Vosburg and Mr. Vail, of Arizona, and E. J. Harrison and James A. Clayton of San Jose. All of these gentlemen are well known and mean business. The fact that they have invested heavily in Los Angeles lands is the best possible proof that capital, always conservative, has no fear for the future of real estate in this section. It is understood that the purchasing price was about $20 an acre. Within the next five years there will doubtless be five hundred families on this tract, or twenty-five hundred persons, and the improvements made at a point so near this city will add largely to the volume of our business. Verily the large ranchos must go, and they are going to be divided up as fast as the incoming population requires more land.

Not a Lot of the 200

that is not worth $600 in the Childs tract. There are 43 lots that are worth from $1,000 to $2,000 a lot. There are 120 that are worth from $700 to $800 per lot. There are 37 lots worth from $600 to $625. In subscribing it is impossible to lose, for any lot—the very poorest—is fully worth the amount you pay.

Diamonds of Finest Quality

In elegant designs at the Diamond House, opposite Baker Block, at New York wholesale prices.

You Will Miss

The purchase of a lot in the Childs tract by delay. Call at the agency and see the names of our most prominent citizens on the subscription book and watch the daily increase.

When Will the Lots be Divided?

The division of the Childs tract will be in May, for the 200 lots will soon be all subscribed for.
